FOREWORD

TO THE CLASS OF EIGHTY-SIX :

It is my great pleasure once more to present you with a Class Report, the seventh in series, and the Twenty-fifth in title.

At this time it has seemed worth while to repeat from the Class Day Report and from the First Class Report a few of our choicest undergraduate memories, and for the sake of completeness to bring together from other early Reports words relating to our long list of names marked with a star.

As always I must ask your indulgence for errors I have failed to correct. As always I must thank not merely a few but nearly every one in the Class for the pleasant support without which such a Report as this is impossible.

If you receive it with nearly the amount of enjoyment I have taken in gathering its contents and seeing the faces of one after another of you rise before me, I shall be abundantly repaid.

Greetings and best wishes to Eighty-six.

Your Classmate,

JOHN HENRY HUDDLESTON.

CLASS REVIEW

The class of '86 assembled in Cambridge in October, 1882, entering 264 members, 5 of whom were from '85. During the freshman year 33 left, so that there were at the beginning of the sophomore year 231. During the sophomore year the class received 17 accessions and lost 31, leaving at the beginning of the junior year 217. During the junior year there were 17 admissions and 19 losses. At the beginning of the senior year there were 215 members; 17 were added and 5 left during the year, and there were therefore at the end of the year 227 members. Two hundred and twenty-three received degrees June 30, 1886.

Three members received their degrees at Commencement 1887 as of the class of '86. Two more received their degrees at later dates, and one, Howard Taylor, who took his degree in 1885, has since been entered, at his own request, by the corporation as of the class of '86. The total has therefore become 229, and of these 45 have died, leaving 184 living graduate members.

In addition to the regular members on the list at the time of graduation there were 82 men connected with the class temporarily at one time or another during the college course. Of these the 6 who took their degrees out of course have been transferred to the regular list; 5 took their degrees with '85, 4 with '87, and 1 with '88; and 5 more were ultimately associated with other classes than '86; accounts of all these have been received from the secretaries of those classes; 12 have died and 11 have never at any time answered any of the secretary's communications, and no information has been obtained about them.

Our class list has also regularly included six names of men who either were in the Lawrence Scientific School or were in their social relations especially identified with '86. Of these 2 have died.

Finally the class, at a meeting held on March 4, 1911, elected as honorary members the three professors now at Harvard, who graduated elsewhere in the year 1886. The aggregate of living regular, temporary, associate, and honorary members at the present time is therefore 225.

Omitting the degrees of the honorary members, 38 men have taken the degree of A.M., 36 M.D., 33 LL.B., 15 Ph.D., 7 S.B., 6 S.T.B., 2 LL.D., 2 S.D., 2 LL.M.; 1 man has taken the degree of D.C.L., 1 Chem.D.

Several men who took the degree of A.M. took one of the other degrees at the same time.

The following have received the degree Ph.D.:

F. T. COOPER	G. SANTAYANA
A. D. COREY	D. W. SHEA
L. W. CUSHMAN	E. N. SNYDER
I. W. FAY	C. VON KLENZE
G. E. HOWES	G. R. WHITE
A. H. LLOYD	G. DROPPERS
W. F. OSGOOD	H. F. WAGENER
T. W. RICHARDS

CLASS BABY

In the First Class Report issued in 1886 appeared the following notice: "Class Cradle. All who received the degree of A.B. in 1886 are eligible for this distinction. The Secretary and Class Committee will duly consider the first claim. If it is found to be just, the fortunate child will receive the cradle and the best wishes of the Class of '86."

In the Second Class Report, issued in 1889, it was stated: "The Class Baby, Eleanor Cary, daughter of Seward Cary of Buffalo, N. Y., was born April 23, 1888. With the advice of Alan G. Mason of the Class Committee a brass cradle was selected, suitably inscribed, and sent to the baby, while the Secretary wrote a letter to the father extending the congratulations of '86, and enclosing an ode written for the occasion by T. P. Sanborn."

It was not until the Fourth Class Report, issued in 1898, that it was brought to the attention of the class that the Secretary and Class Committee had been misled by lack of information, and that '86 had a Class Baby, Marie Natalie Foote, born October 23, 1887, without a "class cradle," and a Class Baby, Eleanor Cary, born April 23, 1888, with a "class cradle," and a Class Boy, Gilman Craig Perkins, born August 5, 1888, with his distinction undisputed.

The three "Class Babies" courteously presented their portraits to the class in the Fifteenth Anniversary Report published in 1902, and it is a pleasure to note in the present report the portrait of the "Class Boy" now no longer a boy but a man engaged in a business started by his grandfather ninety years ago. The young lady who has left her cradle empty has decided to our keen regret not to appear. The Secretary, however, has the honor of announcing officially to the class that the real senior "Class Baby" is no longer ours. She is held by the enemy. Miss Marie Natalie Foote was married on December 28, 1907, to Mr. John Mayer, a Yale '07 man. Yale knelt to Fair Harvard, and the '86 grandchild, John Mayer, 2d, was born July 10, 1909. We are favored with a portrait of the grandchild and his mother.

THE CLASS GATE

At the Class Dinner held June 25, 1900, discussion resulted in the following unanimous action: "Voted, that a committee of seven, to be appointed by the secretary, inform the proper authorities that the class of 1886 has voted to give a gate to the college yard, and applies formally for the assignment of a location; and Voted, that this committee have full power to act for the class in the construction of the proposed gift, and in all matters relating thereto." Accordingly, the following committee was appointed:

GEORGE LEE PEABODY, Chairman,
OLIVER AMES
ADAMS DAVENPORT CLAFLIN

Harvard, Class of 1886

SEWALL HENRY FESSENDEN

ODIN BARNES ROBERTS

CHARLES HITCHCOCK TYLER

THOMAS TILESTON BALDWIN, Secretary and Treasurer.

The committee began work the same evening, and at the next meeting of the President and Fellows, held July 7, 1900, it was "Voted, that the site for a gate northwest of Stoughton Hall be assigned to the class of 1886 in accordance with the advice of Messrs. McKim, Mead, and White." Plans were accordingly made and approved. Subscriptions amounting to $3,758.08 were raised from 138 members, the gate was built, and on Commencement, 1901, the fifteenth anniversary of graduation, the memorial was viewed by the class and informally declared their gift to the college.

TWENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY CLASS REPORT

The Class Committee decided to have a double set of portraits of the men appear in the Twenty-fifth Anniversary Class Report, to have the report ready for Commencement 1911, and to defray the expenses out of the remainder of the class fund, and such additions to that fund as it might be found necessary to make.

A detailed account of the celebration of the Twenty-fifth Anniversary of the class will be given in a subsequent report.

CHIEF MARSHAL, COMMENCEMENT 1911

Following the usual custom, the directors of the Harvard Alumni Association requested the class secretary to obtain an expression of the wishes of the class as to their preference for chief marshal for Commencement 1911, to be elected by the directors, and William Cowper Boyden was elected by them accordingly taken, the resulting nominee was presented to the directors, and William Cowper Boyden was elected by them chief marshal of the Alumni for Commencement 1911.

Degrees: LL.B., and A.M., 1889

'86 to '89, he was in the Harvard Law School and one of the editors of the Harvard Law Review.

After graduation he settled in New York and has since practised law in that city. In '95, in conjunction with Roger Foster he wrote "A Treatise on the Federal Income Tax under the Act of 1894." For two years he lectured on legal subjects in the Metropolis Law School, which was afterward consolidated with the law department of New York University.

In 1900 he was secretary of the Indianapolis convention of the National Party.

Public, corporate, or club offices: Trustee of Reform Club; member of committee on Legislation of the Citizens' Union; member of committee on Law Reform of Bar Association of the City of New York; member of committee on Professional Ethics of New York County Bar Association; member of committee on Judiciary of New York Short Ballot Organization; member of State Committee of Democratic League; member of Executive Committee of Civil Service Reform Association (New York City).

Clubs or Societies since graduation: Harvard Club (formerly); Reform Club; University Club; Calumet Club (formerly); Bar Associations of the City, County, State, and American.

'05, wrote: "So far as my career has had significance outside of its professional relationships, it lies in the political work that I have essayed to do. Since I have been and am a sound-money, free-trade anti-imperialist, the results, as such results are usually measured, have been scarcely visible. The breed to which I belong is so few in numbers and so generally regarded as too idealistic for a practical world that its influence is of the slightest."

'11, wrote: "Once in a while I do a good job. Imprimis I got married, but that is a private story. The one thing that I have done since 1906 that would be of interest to the class relates to the recent constitutional amendment and subsequent legislation by which the City of New York was enabled to increase its borrowing capacity for subway construction, and thus to be in a position where it could either construct subways itself or contract for their construction on even terms with the contractors.

"The Citizens' Union maintains a committee (serving without pay) to examine, and, if necessary, oppose, all proposed legislation affecting the city. As a member of that committee, it fell to my lot to examine the proposed amendment to the state constitution which was intended to enable the city to borrow money for public improvements which would pay for themselves without exceeding the constitutional limitations upon its indebtedness. The bill as it came to me was very imperfectly drawn, and needed to be wholly recast. Partly by good luck and partly by judicious handling of the legislative situation, we were able literally to compel a reluctant group of city officials to accept every safeguard which we deemed necessary, and the result was that when the amendment actually came before the people it was not open to substantial criticism and was adopted. There was so much opposition to it, however, that it would probably have been defeated if its advocates had not been able to say that it embodied all the possible and necessary protective features. In particular it required the establishment of adequate sinking-funds, and it forbade the use of the borrowing capacity which it created for anything but improvements which through their revenues would pay for themselves without cost to the tax-payers. As most of the modifications of the original bill were suggested by me, I think I can justly say that if it had not been for the work that I did at that time and subsequently, the City of New York would not to-day be able to secure proper, or perhaps any, relief from its present almost unendurable transit conditions. That I think was a good job."

In 1903 I came to the company I am now with, and I felt that at last the outlook was more promising than anything I had had up to that time. I am glad to say that this proved to be the case and I am now getting on my feet once more. It has been a long, hard pull, and I have had very little time for anything else. GEORGE CASPAR ADAMS

Born April 24, 1863, at Quincy, Mass.

Father's Name: John Quincy Adams

Harvard, Class of 1886

Mother's Maiden Name: Fannie Cadwallader Crowninshield

Business: Law

Died July 13, 1900

George Caspar Adams was born at Quincy, Mass., April 24, 1863, and died there of consumption July 13, 1900.

He was the fourth in descent from President Adams, Harvard College, '55, and third in descent from President John Quincy Adams, Harvard College, '76. His grandfather was Charles Francis Adams, '25, his father was the late John Quincy Adams, '53, and his mother was Fannie C. Crowninshield.

He received his early education at Adams Academy, in his native town, entering Harvard in the fall of 1882. After graduation and a course in the Law School he devoted himself to the care and management of real estate, having his office in Boston, and being also associated in business with C. J. Hubbard, '83, of Kansas City, Mo.

He was a member of the Somerset, Eastern, and New York Yacht clubs. In college he belonged to the Dickey, Hasty Pudding, and the A. D. clubs.

"The class of '86 has suffered a loss little anticipated by those who remember the rugged George Adams of our undergraduate days. At the age of thirty-seven he has left us behind who supposed when he graduated that a long life was before him. It seems almost superfluous to inscribe on mere paper the record of a man whose likeness is so deeply engraved on the minds of his contemporaries. But a short summary of his career should be recorded for the sake of his classmates and friends.

"For four years he played end on the University Eleven, and after that time until his death, year after year he gave his services to his college in the preparation of each successive football team.

"His business was the management of real estate. From boyhood he loved boating, and in the past ten years with his brother, Charles F. Adams, '88, he was among the leading yachtsmen of Boston.

Records of the Class

"It is not as a business man, nor as a lawyer, nor as an athlete, nor as a member of the Adams family that George Adams will be remembered by his contemporaries until they join him. He stands to our minds as the type of those young Harvard graduates whose fidelity and affection for their college are among the controlling forces of their lives. He might almost be called the archetype of this class. With him as criterion few men can call themselves 'good Harvard men.' Cheerfully he filled his niche in this world. Cheerfully he bore his long illness, and contentedly he laid down his burden and left his friends to mourn. There never was a kindlier man, and there never will be a more honest one."

HERBERT TUFTS ALLEN

Born April 14, 1863, at Somerville, Mass.

Father's Name: Benjamin Franklin Allen

Mother's Maiden Name: Hannah Johnson Tufts

Business: Real Estate

Died December 21, 1892

Herbert Tufts Allen, the son of Benjamin Franklin and Hannah Johnson (Tufts) Allen, was born April 14, 1863, in Somerville, Mass. He prepared for Harvard in the High School of his native place. While in college his career as catcher of the University Nine for four consecutive years made him one of the best known men in Cambridge, and his modest bearing and genial disposition won him sincere friends in addition to the enthusiastic admirers gained by his athletic skill. He was a member of the Pi Eta, Beta Theta Pi, and Delta Kappa Epsilon societies. After graduation he traveled for a short time in the West, and then went into the real estate business in Boston. During his business life he did not lose his interest in athletics, and in 1889 he received a prize for skill in fancy skating at the Massachusetts amateur championship contest. In the spring of 1891 he moved to New York, and was there occupied chiefly in the development and sale of New Jersey lands. In Decem-

Maiden Name of Wife: Ellen Maud Tilton

After graduation began at the Harvard Law School, but was forced in '87 to give up that work on account of ill health. In '88 he became associated for a few months with the banking house of Fuller, Harding & Co. Later he traveled in Europe extensively, and has now for about six years been engaged partly as a trustee and partly as a writer of editorials and other articles, especially on financial subjects.

'03, was made one of the executors of the late Arioeh Wentworth's will and one of the three trustees who are to administer half the estate.

Member of St. Botolph and Art clubs in Boston.

Harvard, Class of 1886

'II, wrote: "The only real 'event' I have to chronicle is my marriage (which occurred in April) to Miss Ellen Maud Tilton of Cambridge, sister of Ben and Will Tilton, '90, and Newell Tilton, 1900. We are planning to sail for Europe in a few days; along with the happy anticipations which will accompany the sailing, I shall have one very keen regret — that I must miss the celebration of our Twenty-fifth Anniversary. We expect to be in London during Coronation week, and if we are able to be away so long, we may take in the Indian Durbar in December.

"As for the rest of my recent history, I have been occupied as an executor or trustee of a number of estates; also as secretary of the Board of Directors, Wentworth Institute, a Trade School with an endowment of $3,000,000 or more, which is to open in September.

"I have spent two summers in Europe during the past three years and have had the good luck to run across some '86 men over there.

"Wherever I am during Anniversary week, I shall drink to the health of '86."

March 31, 1894

Died April 3, 1896

Henry Morton Ayars was born April 3, 1864, at Germantown, Pa., and died in Cambridge from sudden heart failure, April 3, 1896. His early education was received in the public schools of Cleveland. In college he led a studious life, but was a member of the Everett Athenæum and the Delta Upsilon. After graduation he studied in the Harvard Law School for two years, and was then admitted to the Suffolk Bar, July 16, 1888. The summer of that year was spent in the office of R. M. Morse, and in September he wrote: "I have hung out my own shingle in the Equitable Building and am pegging away." Two years and a half later he removed to the Sears Building. His work was constant and hard, but he found time to win for his wife Mary Christine Warren, daughter of President Warren of Boston University, and they were married at Wilbraham, Mass., September 3, 1890. In the oleomargarine agitation, in 1891 and 1892, Ayars was prominent and carried several cases to the Massachusetts Supreme Court. In October, 1891, he was admitted to practice in the United States Circuit Court. His wife writes: "His steady and severe application to work in his office and study at home, which latter I sometimes shared, overtaxed his strength, and in 1895 he took a long Western trip to recover his health, and in this was partially successful. In October, 1895, he formed a partnership with Franklin T. Hammond, and business was coming in so fast that it was difficult for even the two to attend to it. Mr. Ayars's devotion to his work and his ambition to excel in his profession prevented his entering into any outside work in society or politics, but through these two characteristics he accomplished, entirely unaided, more in his eight years of business life than many do in twice the time. . . . All our friends speak of his great devotion to his family as a marked characteristic, and I know what they say to be true."

Dean Richmond Babbitt, son of Hathaway and Margaretta Bailey Babbitt, was born February 28, 1850, in Cincinnati, O., and died in Brooklyn, N. Y., June 21, 1905. In his early years he edited a newspaper in Tennessee. Then he returned to Cincinnati as an attorney with Stanley Matthews, and in the office of Secretary Taft. After this he entered Harvard and took a course in the Cambridge Theological Seminary, being graduated in 1886. While yet a student, he had a charge at Highland Falls, N. Y. Upon leaving Cambridge he was for three years rector of St. John's Church, Milwaukee, Wis., and served in 1889 as overseer of the University of Wisconsin. He then went as a missionary into the Northwest, working in Tacoma as rector of Trinity Protestant Episcopal Church, and in Spokane, Wash., as dean of All Saints' Cathedral. For four years preceding his death he was rector of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the Epiphany in Brooklyn. Dr. Babbitt came from old New England stock, and was a descendant of a pilgrim of the Mayflower. He received the degree of LL.B. at Cincinnati in 1888, and that of LL.D. at the University of Wisconsin the same year.

'86-'88 in Harvard Law School.

'88-'11, practising law in Boston.

Public, corporate, or club offices: secretary of the St. Botolph Club since January, 1907; secretary, 1902, president, 1903, of the Papyrus Club; member of the executive committee of the New England (later, American) Free Trade League from about 1897 to about 1904. Since 1901, chairman of the Board of Graduate Trustees of The Harvard Advocate.

Clubs or Societies since graduation: now a member of the St. Botolph Club, Papyrus Club, Country Club, Longwood Cricket Club, Union Boat Club, Harvard Club of Boston, Harvard Club of New York; Bar Association of city of Boston. Formerly member of the Puritan Club, Twentieth Century Club, Boston City Club, Boston Athletic Association, Massachusetts Reform Club, Quiz Club.

'11, wrote: "In September, 1886, I entered the Harvard Law School, and stayed there until June, 1888, when I passed the bar examination, being admitted to the Suffolk Bar the following September. The attempt to crowd into two years the work of the three years' course in the Law School seriously injured my eyes, so that it was not until May, 1889, that I opened a law office in Boston. My work, especially since 1895, has been chiefly that of a trustee.

"In May, 1891, because of ill health I went abroad for a year, the most interesting part of the trip being a journey on foot and on horseback in mid-winter through the Peloponnesus, in company with a Boston architect, with only such guides as we picked up from town to town. From January, 1901, until January, 1905, I was editor of The Green Bag, an illustrated monthly law magazine published in Boston. My only stuff printed elsewhere has been a history of "The Harvard Advocate," in The Harvard Graduates' Magazine, and a few book-reviews in The Nation.

"I was married in 1889 and have three children: two boys and a girl, the elder boy being a member of the class of 1912. Since January, 1908, I have lived at Chestnut Hill. My recreations are lawn-tennis, squash-rackets, and farming, which last-named pastime I practise — chiefly per alios — on my farm in Fitzwilliam, N. H., where I have spent three or four months each summer (except one) since 1893. I have a set of golf clubs, but likewise have conscientious scruples against using them until I attain the advanced age of Fred Hood and other skilled exponents of the old man's game. My politics are those of a Cleveland democrat, anti-imperialist, and free-trader. To Gordon Woodbury I owe a debt of gratitude for much valuable instruction in the principles of Jeffersonian democracy and of New Hampshire farming.

"My duties as chairman of the Board of Graduate Trustees of the Harvard Advocate have kept me in touch with an interesting side of college life; but of course my pleasantest experiences having to do with college since graduation have come through work on the class committee."

William Sanford Barnes, the son of William Henry Snow Barnes and Mary Mumford (Gould) Barnes, was born September 1, 1864, at San Francisco, Cal., and died of acute Bright's disease at Salada Beach, May 13, 1910. Entering Harvard with the class of '86, he speedily became and continued one of the most prominent members of the class. He rowed on the freshman crew, was on the staff of the Advocate and the Crimson, and belonged to the A. D., the Alpha Delta Phi, Institute of 1770, O. K., and Hasty Pudding, of which he was president. During the sophomore, junior, and senior years he was president of the class, and in the last year he was chosen first marshal for Class Day. On graduation he entered his father's law office, was admitted to the bar in 1888, and practised law in San Francisco until his death. He was early interested in politics, and was a member of the Republican State Convention in May, 1888. In 1890 he was elected District Attorney of the City and County of San Francisco and served four terms of two years each.

During this service he attained distinction for his successful conduct of certain murder trials. He was also lecturer for a term at the Stanford University Law School. During the Spanish war he served from June 28, 1898, to February 9, 1899, as captain of Company C, Eighth California U. S. V. Infantry. His strong social bent made him a popular member of numerous clubs, among them the Pacific Union, Press, and Union League clubs of San Francisco, and he was an occasional contributor to popular as well as to professional publications.

On January 5, 1893 he was married in San Francisco to Delphine Delmas, from whom he was later divorced. His son, Sanford Delmas, was born July 17, 1896. On January 1, 1906, he was married to Lauretta Hulick, who survives him.

"The decease of the man who was president of the class of 1886 from sophomore to senior years, inclusive, and who was chosen first marshal for Class Day by an emphatic majority, calls imperatively for more than perfunctory notice in the class report next succeeding his death.

"With the culmination of his popular leadership of the class at graduation, Barnes' association with the class ceased, save for nominal enrolment.

"Though by no means lacking in general ability, Barnes' chief characteristic was amiability, a quality sufficient to make a man popular with his fellows in college, but which, unsupported by the more solid essentials of character, becomes a progressively diminishing factor in determining the resultant of esteem in which a man is held in a larger, less sympathetic, and more exacting community.

Harvard, Class of 1886

"But inasmuch as he was not found wanting in our undergraduate balances, as he won our affection by warm-hearted cheerfulness, and impartial democratic kindness, we may well hold to the memory of what he was when he parted from us twenty-five years ago."

RAYMOND RODGERS BELMONT

Born July 19, 1863, at Newport, R. I.

Father's Name: August Belmont

Mother's Maiden Name: Caroline Slidell Perry

Died January 31, 1887

Raymond Rodgers Belmont, a younger son of August and Caroline Slidell (Perry) Belmont, was born at Newport, R. I., July 19, 1863. He was fitted for college at St. Mark's School, Southboro, Mass., and for a time previous to coming up for his entrance examinations, was under the instruction of a private tutor.

After Belmont entered college he took great interest in the social life of the class, and made for himself a large circle of friends. He was a member of the Institute of 1870, the Hasty Pudding Club, the Zeta Psi, and the Porcellian Club, and at one time was connected with the Advocate, as business manager. He was also fond of all forms of athletics, especially of polo playing. He was one of the founders of the Harvard Polo Club, and in 1885 was captain of the Harvard Polo team, which at Newport won the championship of America for that year.

Belmont was a man of exceptional brightness, although while in the college he never cared to exert his powers to the utmost. He received his degree with honorable mention in Natural History.

The news of his sudden death, January 31, 1887, was a

I have tried to compensate for my lack of patriotism in never seeking or holding public office by giving considerable time to various organizations whose objects have been the betterment of political and social conditions in Chicago. Some of these organizations with which I have been connected, notably the Municipal Voters' League, have done splendid work in purifying the political life of the city.

"It has been my good fortune to participate quite actively in the work of increasing Harvard's influence in the middle West. I am convinced that the College deserves and needs the loyalty and enthusiasm of all her sons. I am further convinced that work for the College keeps alive the best memories and ideals of one's life, and furnishes a fountain of youth which no one can afford to shun. The Associated Harvard Clubs, of which I had the honor to be the second president, has become an almost national power for good for the College. Its Western members modestly imagine that it is responsible for the Harvard Club of Boston and for the gratifying activity of late of the Alumni Association.

"For three years I was president of the University Club of Chicago. During that period the Club built a new club house which cost, exclusive of the value of the ground upon which it is located, $1,250,000. During its construction I regretted many times that I had not taken Fine Arts III while in College. Fortunately, my artistic assistance was not sought. The club house is beautiful and a source of great pride to the college men of Chicago. There is a card to the University Club waiting for every '86 man who comes to Chicago.

"My proudest boast concerning my life for the last twenty-five years is that I have probably traveled more miles than any other '86 man to attend the dinners of the class, which have been given during that period. In this regard only, I consider myself the wisest man in the class. Without this experience I could not appreciate as I do the splendid manhood of the class; and how delightful are the friendships of youth in later life if cultivated by occasional association. I trust that at the fiftieth anniversary of our graduation all of our classmates will have

Born March 31, 1863, at Boston, Mass.

Father's Name: William Dade Brewer

Mother's Maiden Name: Susan Victoria Shattuck

Business: Law

Died October 28, 1898

William Dade Brewer was born in Boston, Mass., March 31, 1863, and died October 28, 1898, at Centre Harbor, N. H. He was a Chauncy Hall boy from 1875 to 1881, and in the fall of the latter year entered college with the class of '85. At the end of his freshman year he left the college, and took up the work of the first year of the Law School, but finding that it was a mistake not to finish the college course, he entered '86 in its sophomore year and took his degree of A.B. with that class. After graduation he took up the work of the Law School again, and after completing the course opened an office in Boston for the practice of law.

From that time (1889) he lived with his father and mother in Newton, and practised his profession in Boston. Although not tied to law as a means of livelihood, he was conscientious and painstaking in all that he undertook. As time went on his health became impaired, he grew more and more retiring in his habits, and his natural taste for books and study became more marked; coupled with this was a thoroughly healthy love for out-of-door sports and for country life. He often said that he wished to lead a quiet, retired life in the country, and that he should do so when his plans were made. Perhaps with this end in view he acquired a modest estate in Centre Harbor, N. H., on the beautiful shores of Squam Lake. There he spent the last few summers of his life, and it was there he withdrew in failing health in the spring of 1898.

He was not strong, physically, and was obliged to favor himself on that account in his work. A very severe attack of the grippe weakened him greatly, and was finally the cause of his death.

He was fond of music, and in college composed music for some of the Pi Eta plays. He was also an efficient manager at these functions. The intellectual work of his profession was easy for him, but outside of that he was too reserved to have many intimate friends. Studious, quiet, hardly seeking companionship, though not declining it, he was little known even by those who saw him most frequently. Appreciation of his kindness and ready sympathy and general respect for his abilities seem to have been his portion in life.

He was prepared for college at St. Mark's School, and took the gold medal on graduation. While in college he played on the '86 baseball and football teams, was a member of the Dickey and of the Hasty Pudding, and graduated magna cum laude. He then went West, and after five years' training in the operating department of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy R. R., in 1891 was appointed train master in Providence for the Old Colony R. R., and somewhat later becoming agent, retained this position when the Old Colony was leased by the New York, New Haven and Hartford R. R. In 1894 he was made assistant superintendent of the Worcester Division, and in June, 1899, he became superintendent. He married at Providence, October 24, 1894, Ethel Raymond Mason, and she with his two daughters survives him.

Charles Cutter Burnett was a man of singularly attractive personality, as all who were acquainted with him will testify. Though not a brilliant thinker, he possessed a mind that was lucid in its processes and quick and firm in its grasp. He gave ample proof of his mental power by his rapid mastery of the intricate problems of railway management, so that in the course of a very few years he rose from the bottom of the ladder to a position of great responsibility.

"The simplicity and directness of his manners were indicative of his character. He did not content himself with being merely just to all, and scrupulously faithful to his word; for, regardless of social distinctions, he was invariably generous and kindly. His death cut short a career already fruitful, and promising yet more in worldly success and in usefulness to his fellows." H. L.

Degree: D.C.L. (Univ. of South), 1907

George Rice Carpenter was born in Labrador, October 25, 1863, and died at his home in New York City, April 8, 1909. He was prepared for college at Phillips Academy, Andover, and entered Harvard with the class of '86.

While in college he took second-year highest honors in classics and an oration at graduation. He was on the staff of the Advocate, one of the founders and president of the Monthly, and was a member of O. K. and Phi Beta Kappa. From 1886 to 1888 he was a student of comparative literature in Berlin on a Rogers Fellowship, after which he became an instructor in English at Harvard.

In 1890 he became assistant professor of English at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, and in 1893 professor or rhetoric and English composition at Columbia University. In the English Department of this University he continued as one of the professors until his death.

He was a member of the Century, Players', and Harvard clubs of New York.

The following is abbreviated from the minute spread upon the records of the department of English, Columbia University, N. Y.

While assistant professor of English at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology he published (1893) "Exercises in rhetoric and English composition," a book since widely used and later, in revised forms, adapted to secondary school as well as to college teaching. This book was and is of great value in our contemporary study of rhetoric, since it was an important step in the further simplification of a subject that had been detailed and formalized to a high degree. The aim of Professor Carpenter was to present the few necessary principles of the subject and to illustrate them so that they could readily be put into practice. The method which he employed is substantially that in vogue to-day in all high schools and colleges in the land, and the success of the work which he and others did is made evident in the great increase in dignity, usefulness, and amount of work in English composition in all schools and colleges.

Called to Columbia in May, 1893, he entered on his duties the following September as head of the department of rhetoric and English composition, since merged into the department of English. Most of his time was, for the next few years, taken up with the organization of his department in the thorough way that characterized all of his enterprises, and in his own teaching. He introduced a curriculum of courses in rhetoric of great practical value, and this he strengthened from year to year and kept in excellent working order. The success of his department was due chiefly to his own personality, for he was himself an admirable teacher. His personal hold on his classes in those years — as always — was very great. His constant aim was to clarify the minds of his students, to make them think soberly, justly, and temperately on all subjects, and to train them to express themselves with firmness and simplicity.

Besides these duties he found opportunity to write new and revise old text-books, and he became, in 1895, general editor of Longman's English Classics.

In addition to a long series of valuable books for teachers and students, Professor Carpenter was also profoundly interested in literature. In 1888 he obtained the Dante Prize — offered by the Dante Society, of which he was later the secretary — by means of a brilliant essay entitled "The episode of the Donna Pietosa." To American letters his service was particularly distinguished. His "American prose" (1898) was followed by a succinct and lucid sketch of Longfellow in the Beacon Biographies (1901), and an excellent life of Whittier in the American Men of Letters series (1903), and in the English Men of Letters "Walt Whitman" (1909). This book, which appeared during his last illness, deserves special mention as the expression of the maturity and fulness of his powers.

At the merging in 1899-1900 of the departments of English, literature, and rhetoric in the present department of English, Professor Carpenter became secretary, and his work in the building up of the present English graduate school was of a brilliant description. Though his work here lay rather in organization than in teaching and in the indispensable oversight of doctors' and masters' theses, his own teaching in the Graduate School was of great variety and value. Professor Carpenter, as his many writings and excellent courses show, was an admirable and stimulating scholar. His learning was great and his work was accurate and thorough. His courses were full, suggestive, and practical, for his scholarship was fertile. He was also the editor of the Columbia University Quarterly, and to him is due much of the inception and success of the present University magazine.

Professor Carpenter spent the greater part of the year of 1906-07 in Europe, on leave of absence. Shortly after his return he delivered an address at the semi-centennial of the University of the South, which honored him with the degree of D.C.L., in June, 1907. Resuming his academic duties in the fall of that year, he was made chairman of a very important special committee of the faculty of Columbia College to examine into the state of college instruction and to devise means for the better coördination of courses. He was also a member of the committee of nine appointed to inquire into the state of the whole University. It was while in the midst of his active services in these important works that he was stricken with his fatal illness.

The value of the services of Professor Carpenter to the University and to education and scholarship in this country can hardly be overrated. Though dying at the comparatively early age of forty-five, he accomplished a great amount of work, as the list of his publications shows, was widely recognized as a leader in education, was among the most thorough and stimulating of our scholars, and was in all respects a great teacher. Efficiency and common-sense were united in him with a high degree of charm of personality and modest nobility of mind. His work tended always to become broader, his interests became continually more and more human, and his writing grew constantly in grace and strength. He was a very distinguished member of this community and his loss is not likely soon to be made good.

In 1909 the Department of English of Columbia voted to found a memorial library to be named the George Rice Carpenter Memorial Library, and arranged to purchase a large part of Carpenter's private library, and to use his books as a basis for the memorial library.

"Heavily burdened as he became with manifold intellectual and practical obligations, he never allowed a year to pass without re-reading the 'Divine Comedy.'

"He was always dreaming of a time when he might conscientiously withdraw from undergraduate teaching and academic administration enough to devote himself again seriously to Dante scholarship."

J. B. F.

So run the journal and dignified statements of George Carpenter's standing and aims in the world of scholars, but how much of him is omitted! His fineness of character shone in his face, was heard in his voice, and was felt in his every expression. His intellectual curiosity led him into most varied courses of study from calculus to Semitic literature, and when his habitual reserve had been penetrated the breadth of his interests combined with his simple sincerity won for him lasting affection. Positive and clear, yet kindly and gentle, he was nearly an ideal counsellor and friend.

GEORGE RICE CARPENTER

He was a brother to his friends, a friend
To all in need. He gave himself, as kings
Strew gold, in little daily helpful things,
Ungrudging, while there yet was life to spend.
Humble of heart and holy to the end
He lived; for in his soul were Pisgah springs
Whereon God's shadow fell, and beckonings
Of hopes which our mortality transcend.
Hardly we reached to that shy soul of his,
So like the tall Alps which he loved, aloof
Like them in quietness, high over earth.
Yet without scorn he met life as it is,
In service putting his high soul to proof,
Womanly gentle, lit by cleanly mirth.

I hear '86 is notable for the number of college presidents among its membership, and distinguished for possessing among its members the first authority in the world in inorganic chemistry, as well as being celebrated in other activities. I am proud to read about the success and triumphs of '86 men, as I frequently do in the Bulletin or elsewhere. We have only one member of Congress, but his independence and progressiveness are a credit to old Harvard and to all of us. Good luck to you, old man. At the request of the newly organized Harvard Aeronautical Society I organized and carried out the first Aviation Meet held in this country. Other places had had exhibitions at which the aviators had been paid a fixed sum merely to give a few exhibition flights, but no meet had ever been held in this country where real competitions, with valuable prizes, were to be seen. The meet was a great success and created great public interest in the new method of transportation that bids fair to have such a radical influence on life during the coming century. I was particularly pleased that Harvard should thus be placed in the forefront in this new science and should have the prestige of having carried through the first great meet on this continent.

Walter Thomas Clark, son of Col. Thomas Clark and Cordelia Almena (Richardson) Clark, was born October 26, 1861, at Cleveland, O., and died in Portland, Me., September 24, 1908. He was educated in the public schools of Cambridge, Mass., graduated at Harvard with the class of '86, and four years later took his degree at the Harvard Medical School. In college he took high rank, and was a member of the Phi Beta Kappa and Delta Upsilon. He came to Worcester as one of the house officers at the Worcester City Hospital immediately after his graduation from Medical School. He began the practice of his profession in Worcester at the close of his hospital service and continued it until the early part of 1908, when he was compelled by ill health to relinquish it.

His professional attainments and standing secured for him appointments on the staff of the City Hospital (1894-1911) and Memorial Hospital (1893-1901). He enjoyed the confidence of his fellow physicians, and was always prominent in the local medical societies. He was a member of the Massachusetts Medical Society, Practitioners' Club, Massachusetts Association of Boards of Health, and of the Worcester Medical Association, of which organization he was president from 1898 to 1900.

He was also from 1894 to 1905 city physician, and as such chairman of the Board of Health. To the performance of these duties he brought the same intelligence, tact, and good judgment that he elsewhere exhibited. He was not opinionated, but was open-minded and approachable, and made a most acceptable public official.

On February 25, 1891, he was married to Annie Merrill Greely, daughter of Rensselaer and Eunice D. Greely of Portland, Me., and had one daughter, Marion, born December 19, 1893.

He was a member of the Worcester Club, the Tatnuck Country Club and several other social clubs and had and enjoyed a wide circle of friends. He liked the cheer of a good story.

Harvard, Class of 1886

His failing health did not find him disheartened and sad, but he faced what he must have known to be inevitable with a manly, cheerful courage that was inspiring.

During his last illness his wife became afflicted with the incurable disease, which later ended her life. She went bravely about assisting him all she could, and kept her secret to herself. She did not long survive him. Not many households have shown more fortitude and Christian resignation.

Harvard, Class of 1886

While we, the members of the class of '86, are looking forward with the keenest delight to the celebration of our twenty-fifth anniversary in June, to meeting again our classmates, some of whom we have not seen for a quarter of a century, to visiting familiar scenes of our college days, and pledging again our fealty to our class and our loyalty to "fair Harvard," there yet comes over us a feeling of sadness as we look over the list and see how many of our classmates have passed to "the great beyond," and cannot share with us the joys that cluster around such a reunion.

The news of the death of a friend, even though daily expected, is always sudden, solemn, and sad. This is particularly so when the deceased is in the prime of life, in full possession of his intellectual power, and just reaching the full tide of usefulness and success in his chosen profession. Such were the facts in the sudden taking off of our classmate, Frederic Coggeshall, who died February 1, 1911.

Frederic Coggeshall was born in the city of New York on January 8, 1861, and was christened Frederick Lincley Coggeshall, but before entering college he changed the spelling of his first name and omitted the second. His father was George Dilwin Coggeshall, for a number of years the president of the Broadway National Bank of New York. His mother was Emma Walter of Philadelphia. The Walter family had been known for many years for its broad culture, liberal learning, public spirit and prominence in public affairs. Both his father and mother were of English descent. On his father's side, he traced his genealogy back to Sir Ralph Coggeshall of England and John Coggeshall, the first president (1647) of the Rhode Island Colony. On his mother's side, he was related to Commodore Perry of Japan fame. His grandmother, Elizabeth Hosier Coggeshall, was not only a very interesting character, but one of such extraordinary ability and learning that I insert herewith a short sketch of her as described in the family history.

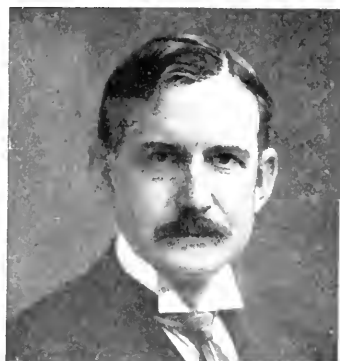

"Elizabeth Hosier Coggeshall was a minister of the Society of Friends, active in the Old World and in our own country, visiting meetings and families where there was a settlement of Friends. During a period of thirteen years she visited all the meetings of Friends in America. . . . Her second pilgrimage to England was made in 1813, when the war between England and America was in progress; the transportation was difficult, application was made to the Government and 'Elizabeth Coggeshall' was permitted to take passage in the company with prisoners of war."

His parents were highly cultured, both were fond of intellectual pursuits and widely read; his father was a graduate of Yale. They possessed adequate means, at least in his early youth, and nothing which could contribute to their intellectual taste was lacking. With the exception of a short time spent at a Friend School, our classmate received no instruction at any public or private school previous to entering Harvard. Under the wise guidance of his parents, he studied at home, having the use of a large and well selected library. Even without the spur of teachers or the emulation of classmates, he devoted himself assiduously to his studies, and before entering college had read widely and thoroughly, and was particularly well grounded in English literature. The breadth and depth of his reading was recognized early in his college course. He was noted for his tenacious memory, which enabled him to make instant use of his wide and extensive knowledge. He wrote with facility, great clearness, and brevity. He was a keen and logical reasoner, always fair and generous to those who differed with him, and ready whenever convinced to change his own views. In the early part of his college course he was strongly opposed to the requirement of a knowledge of the dead languages for admission to college, and many were the arguments we had on this topic. Later in life, however, he changed his opinion and became as strongly convinced that a knowledge of the Classics was necessary if one were to possess a broad and liberal education. During his four years at Harvard he took twice as many courses as were required and stood high in all of them. It was certainly a remarkable achievement, but the wisdom of undertaking so much is doubtful. Later in life he occasionally admitted that it would have been wiser if he had devoted more time to the social side of college life, to the forming of friendships which contribute so largely to one's happiness in after years, and to some branch of athletics for genuine recreation. Fortunately he possessed a strong constitution, and had wonderful powers of concentration and endurance for mental work.

While he had made up his mind even before entering college to practise medicine, he did not elect those courses in college which would either lessen his work in the Medical School, or specially prepare him for his future work. On the other hand, he made an extraordinarily wise selection, electing courses in English, Philosophy, the Fine Arts, Modern Languages, and History, being determined, as he said, to enter upon his profession with a broad foundation and well grounded in the liberal arts.

He was a member of the Phi Beta Kappa, the Philosophical Club, and the Historical Society. After graduating in 1886, he remained one year at Cambridge, pursuing a post-graduate course; he then entered the Harvard Medical School, where he remained three years. Then he went abroad for a year attending the clinics at the hospitals in London and visiting for several months the continent. He returned to Boston at the end of the year, and completed his course at the Harvard Medical School, taking his degree of M.D. in 1892. After being associated for a short time with older physicians, he opened an office on Newbury Street; and here in Boston he practised up to the date of his decease, his last office being at 541 Commonwealth Avenue.

He loved his profession, and devoted every ounce of his strength and every minute of his time to it. He sympathized deeply with his patients in their suffering, and it was one of his greatest pleasures to relieve and restore them to health. No effort on his part was ever too great which could in the slightest degree add to their comfort or promote their happiness. He possessed a wonderful power of diagnosis, and just as in college, he thought rapidly and logically, so in his profession he was equally quick and accurate in getting at the real nature of disease. While his loss will be keenly felt by all who had the pleasure of his acquaintance, his patients, poor people particularly, will miss him, for he was generous to them to the last degree, not only rendering services oftentimes free of charge, but even advancing money to pay their expenses at hospitals, when they themselves could not afford it. In spite of his close attention to his profession, he contrived somehow to find time to reread the classics, and to keep his knowledge of English literature and modern languages always fresh. The following obituary, which appeared in the Boston Transcript of February 11, 1911, written by Reverend Howard N. Brown of Boston, voices so well the estimation in which he was held by the public in general that I insert it here:

“Few men have recently gone out of our life followed by so much love and gratitude as have marked the passing of this wise and kind physician. Nature had endowed him with that rarest and most mysterious of gifts which we speak of as an ‘unusual personality.’ While he was not fitted to play the part of popular hero — and indeed the popular hero was apt to be his pet abomination — they who fell under the spell of his personal influence found in him a quite extraordinary blending of gentleness and strength. That he possessed uncommon skill as a physician would be the opinion, not only of his patients, who were wont to think that he was incapable of mistake, but also of competent professional observers who met him in the sick-room. His devotion to those who put their lives into his keeping was carried to the point of entire self-forgetfulness. His kindness and tenderness to those in suffering and need can never be over praised for those who received his help. His courage in following any way which seemed to him right gave others confidence to lean upon his counsel and advice. While his general view of life was of no conventional pattern, and he was in many ways an unconventional man, people of all classes were attracted to him by the rare quality of his mental gifts. Having, in large measure, the intellectual force which is apt to be reckoned a masculine trait, together with a woman's affectionate and sympathetic disposition, he was a man who deeply impressed himself upon those who came into friendly relations with him. Once known he could never be forgotten; and many now feel that he has left a vacant place in their lives which none other can fill.

H. N. B."

Dr. Coggeshall fell ill in the early fall of 1910, but though suffering intense pain, continued to visit his patients, rendering invaluable service even when he himself should have been under medical care. Often when so fatigued that he could not leave the house, he would leave his bed with the utmost difficulty to administer to those who came to see him. The time soon came, however, when he could not even do this; but he fought on heroically, believing that, with the help of the very best medical attendance which the city could afford constantly at his side, he would weather this sickness which was upon him. Up to the very last minute he bravely looked forward to a recovery.

At the time of his decease the future looked particularly bright; it was the beginning of the high tide of his professional career. More and more he was being called into consultation by other physicians, — he had a steady and increasing patronage of his own, — and after an uphill struggle, of all these years, he began to see more than a competence ahead of him. He possessed rare courage, never hesitated to act in dangerous cases, and performed difficult operations with great skill. He kept thoroughly abreast of the times, was always on the lookout for the newest ideas in all departments of his profession, and ready to adopt the latest medical views. He had become very skilful in the use of bacterines in the cure of disease, and was profoundly convinced that this was the coming method of cure. One physician said of him that "no one used bacterines more freely or more intelligently than Dr. Coggeshall." The wonderful results he obtained justified him in his faith in that method.

He also rendered valuable service in the hospitals. For several years he was assistant in the nerve department of the

Records of the Class

Massachusetts General Hospital and the Boston City Hospital, physician in charge of the nurses' department at the Boston Dispensary, and pathologist at the Carney Hospital, was a member of the Boston Society for Medical Improvement, Massachusetts Medical Society, American Medical Association, American Academy of Medicine, and Boston Medical Library Association. He was also a member of the City Club of Boston, a social organization, and the Harvard Club of New York.

The following episode seems to indicate to a marked degree the sturdiness of his character and the courage of his convictions. His father, a graduate of Yale, was naturally desirous, even insistent, that his son should follow in his footsteps; but he, on the other hand, after a careful investigation of the opportunities offered at many colleges, decided that Harvard offered him the widest and best field for study. Nothing could shatter his faith in Harvard, and to Harvard he went, though to do so brought down upon him bitter opposition on the part of his family, and made it necessary for him to rely upon himself to secure a Harvard degree. A thorough student, he was equally a thorough and a successful tutor, oftentimes in the very branches in which he was studying for the first time.

He married on October 15, 1890, Lida Canfield of Cambridge, Mass., who, with one child, Reginald, born November 18, 1893, survive him. His home life was particularly happy, and he found in his wife a helpmate in every sense of the word, whose encouragement and sympathy were of profound value to him.

I know of no better way of closing than by saying that if it were true of anyone, it was true of him, that "the world was his country, and to do good was his religion." A. A. G.

Records of the Class

Arthur Deloraine Corey, the only child of Deloraine Pendre and Isabella (Holden) Corey, was born in Malden, Mass., April 13, 1866. His early education was gained in that city, and he was soon known as a capital student, being the youngest scholar ever admitted to the High School, and the head of his class at graduation. He entered college with '85, and his decided inclination for classical studies became evident the first year. The sophomore year he took highest second-year honors in classics. In the beginning of his junior year he had an attack of scarlet fever so severe that he was forced to give up work for the rest of the year. Returning the following fall, he entered '86, but was almost immediately taken down with typhoid fever, and the early part of that year also was lost to study. Still, by extra work, he advanced with '86, and, as a senior, won a Bowdoin prize by an essay on "The Dionysiac Theatre." While in college he was a member of the Total Abstinence Society, the Christian Brethren, and Phi Beta Kappa, and was one of the founders, and for a long time secretary, of the Classical Club. He graduated with an oration and honors in classics. Illness followed him persistently; the summer of 1886 he had diphtheria. Returning, nevertheless, pluckily to work in the fall, he went through a post-graduate year, and was during this one of the original members of La Conférence Française. With his A.M. degree he went abroad, still a student, for seven semesters of hard work in Berlin. Here, besides his lectures and reading, he was interested in and helped found the International Total Abstinence Society of Berlin, and an American church. His vacations were spent in Italy, Switzerland, France, and England. In June, 1891, he received the doctor's degree, presenting for it a thesis on an archæological subject, "De Amazonum Antiquissimis Figuris." Returning to America he spent the summer at his home in Malden, was there taken with peritonitis, and died after three days' illness, August 17, 1891.

Hugh Thompson Dickey, Jr., son of Frances Russell de Koven, and Judge Hugh Thompson Dickey, was born in Chicago, December 7, 1863. He received his early education in Europe, but prepared for college at Dr. Coit's school in New Hampshire. While in Harvard his health, always delicate, combined with a natural reserve, kept him from making a wide acquaintance, but the few friends he allowed himself recognized the fineness of his mind and valued him highly. After graduation he traveled for a while in Europe, and then entered the Columbia Law School. Ill health continuing, however, he gave up study, and went into a bank for the winter. During this time he met Miss Louise Lawrence Whitney, daughter of Stephen Whitney, of New Haven, Conn., and they were married April 3, 1888. Another trip abroad failed to give him strength, and a year was spent therefore at Colorado Springs, but consumption steadily advanced, and he returned home to die, March 11, 1891. He left one child, Frances de Koven, born May 15, 1889.

July 12, 1906

(d. January 11, 1907)

Died October 9, 1906

Walter Howard Edgerly, eldest son of Charles B. and Mary Howard Edgerly, was born in Boston, April 26, 1864, and died at his home, at Longwood, Boston, October 9, 1906. He prepared for college at the Cambridge High School, and entered the class of '86 at the beginning of its freshman year, and took his degree, with creditable standing, in the regular course. In his freshman year he played on the Freshman Nine, and in his junior and senior years was a member of the University Nine. During his entire college course he was one of the most valued members of the University Glee Club. His college clubs included the Institute of 1770, DKE, and Hasty Pudding.

Upon leaving college he spent a year each in the offices of F. S. Moseley & Co., and Blake Brothers & Co. In 1889 he formed a partnership with J. B. Crocker, '89, under the firm name of Edgerly & Crocker, in the stock, bond, and note brokerage business, which partnership continued until his death. For a number of years their offices have been at 53 State Street, Boston. His success in business was marked. Unaided, he became the head of one of the most active firms in their line in Boston. This success naturally followed his industry, keen business sense, high ideals, and wonderful capacity for enlisting the confidence and affection of those with whom he came in contact. His classmates will rejoice that it has often been said of him that there was no more popular man "on the Street."

After graduation, he was well known in Boston as an excellent tenor singer, and was a member of the Apollo Club and the Harvard Musical Society. Of a most sociable nature, he numbered among his clubs the University, Tennis and Racquet, Exchange, Massachusetts Automobile Club of Boston, the Country Club of Brookline, and the Harvard Club of New York.

On January 3, 1905, he was married to Nathalie Alice Bloom, a niece of his friend and classmate, William R. Dewey. A daughter was born to them July 12, 1906.

Walter Edgerly was a rare, fascinating personality. His wit and sense of humor were delicious and always at command, but there was in them nothing but kindness. He had the very genius of sociability. No one ever saw enough of him. At the Class dinners and Reunions, no one's laugh rang out so cheery and infectious as his, and when he led in song, his magnetism made everyone sing better than he knew. He loved the College and the Class, and delighted to serve upon anniversary committees of the Class. His friends will always remember his devotion to his widowed mother, his unfailing courtesy, kindness, and generosity, the manliness and courage with which he faced the discouragements of life and his fatal illness. He combined with aggressive, nervous energy the sympathetic refinement of a good woman. When the Class meets in the years to come, no one will be more missed, and his memory will be dear to many of us while memory lasts.

ARTHUR FAULKNER

Father's Name: Francis Augustus Faulkner

Mother's Maiden Name: Caroline Handerson

Business: Journalist

Died March 8, 1911

'11, wrote: "When you fellows were celebrating Harvard's Sesquicentennial I was making my way toward Kansas, where I had accepted — at my brother's solicitation — a position as book-keeper in the Citizens' Bank of Wichita. I knew nothing about book-keeping. I don't now, and that ignorance was so evident that I was transferred to other departments in the bank. I was sent out to take charge of the closing out of two stocks of goods; one wholesale and retail furniture, and another wholesale groceries, on which the bank had been forced to foreclose its mortgages. These took up the first half of 1888.

"The year 1890 was spent at the Wichita Union Stock Yards, where I was cashier of a branch of the bank. In 1891 was made vice-president of the Citizens' Bank, and also served as receiving-teller until 1893, when I was elected cashier and vice-president, which positions I held until the summer of 1895, when we made a consolidation with the Kansas National Bank under the name of the latter.

"I served as cashier of the Kansas National Bank until January, 1897, when my mother's failing health called me to Keene. I was made treasurer of the Trinity Cycle Mfg. Co., and a large part of the next ten months was spent in Worcester, Mass., where our factory then was. In November, 1897, the shops were moved to Keene. The business was not profitable, and a couple of years later we ventured on automobile making and I was put in charge of the office. This was not a money maker, and was discontinued in 1902.

"In the autumn of 1901 my mother was stricken with apoplexy, and the next five unhappy years were spent with her until, in November, 1906, when her condition became such that she could no longer recognize me and I could no longer be of benefit to her, I returned to Wichita and the many friends I had made here.

"I arrived here exactly twenty years after my first coming, and in January, 1907, became advertising manager of the Wichita Daily Eagle, the largest — ask Harold Chase of the Topeka Capital — daily in Kansas.

Harvard, Class of 1886

"Increasing ill health forced me to give this up in May, 1909, and since then I have not been in business. Last June I suffered from a severe attack of organic heart disease, which has kept me largely in my rooms or on quiet visits with friends on ranches or in neighboring towns."

Arthur Faulkner lies buried at Wichita, Kans., where, from heart-failure following a protracted period of ill health, he died on March 8, 1911. The son of Francis Augustus and Caroline (Handerson) Faulkner, he was born at Keene, N. H., October 2, 1862. He was of the ninth generation of the Faulkner family which settled at Andover, Mass., early in the seventeenth century. His father, a well-known member of the New Hampshire Bar, was graduated from Harvard with the class of 1846, and while at college served as orator and president of the Hasty Pudding Club. His older brother, Gen. Francis Child Faulkner, was a graduate of the class of 1874, was secretary, poet, and "Kr." of the Pudding, president of the Magenta, later the Crimson, and after graduation was admitted to the bar, and held office as railroad commissioner and judge-advocate general of New Hampshire.

Faulkner was fitted for Harvard and entered from Exeter Academy, after an earlier period of private tutoring. In mental capacity he was far above the mass, yet he made no attempt to attain scholarship standing. An omnivorous reader, he covered more ground outside his college courses than within their prescribed limits. He chose such courses as he considered best adapted to a liberal mental development, and took the keenest delight in his work in English literature under the old friend and classmate of his father, the late Prof. Francis James Child, of happy Harvard memory.

Of the clubs and other undergraduate organizations with which he was connected, he most enjoyed his membership in the Pudding, in which his father and brother had been leading spirits in their undergraduate days, and on becoming assistant librarian of the club he took especial delight in causing to be rebound at his own expense the books which they had given to its library. He also was much interested in the quaint old library of the Institute of 1770, and deeply resented the condition of neglect into which it had fallen in his time. Becoming a member of the staff of the Herald-Crimson, later the Crimson, he gave his best energies to its rehabilitation, and it was largely due to his unselfish efforts that the paper emerged from the slough of semi-bankruptcy and, when he left it, even boasted a most respectable surplus in its treasury.

On graduation he went to Wichita, where he became cashier and vice-president of the Citizens' National Bank, and was identified with the local electric railway, the stock yards, and other enterprises. Heavily hit by the Kansas depression of ten years later, he returned to Keene in 1897, and became treasurer of the Trinity 'Cycle Company, and later was interested in the manufacture of automobiles. During this period he built on the shores of the beautiful lake at Chesham a cosy fishing camp, in which it was his delight to entertain any friends, and especially any classmates, on whom he could lay his hospitable hand. On the death of his mother, in 1907, he again turned to the West, and became connected with the business management of the Wichita Daily Eagle; but his health had begun to fail him, his eyes troubled him greatly, and his last years permitted him but little activity. He was a member of the Coronado Club of Wichita, and of the Harvard, Wentworth, and Chorus Clubs of Keene. Intensely fond of music, he took a deep and active interest in the work of the last named society, and did much towards securing for it the more than local reputation for choral singing, which it now enjoys.

After a life containing much of disappointment and much of cheery good-fellowship, Arthur Faulkner is now at rest. Intensely loyal to his friends, he leaves for a time friends who still remain intensely loyal to him. His memory is one that will not lightly be allowed to pass.

Cornelius Conway Felton was the youngest child of Samuel M. Felton, born at Newbury, Mass., a resident of Philadelphia, Pa., and a graduate of Harvard, of the class of '34. His mother was Maria L. Lippitt, of Providence, R. I. Felton was born December 29, 1863. His early education was obtained in Philadelphia. At the age of about fifteen years he was sent to Mr. Knapp's boarding school in Plymouth, Mass., where he prepared for St. Paul's School at Concord, N. H. Leaving St. Paul's in 1880, he entered the class of '82 at Phillips Academy at Exeter, N. H., where he prepared for Harvard.

While in college he was on the Lampoon, and was a member of the Art, Chess, and Hasty Pudding clubs, and the Historical Society.

Immediately after graduation he entered the law office of the Hon. Wayne MacVeagh, of Philadelphia, at the same time attending lectures at the University of Pennsylvania Law School. He was admitted to the bar in 1888, and in the autumn after his admission began the practice of law in Philadelphia. During the summer of 1890, in which he died, he resided in Philadelphia, making weekly trips to Bay Head, N. J., where his mother's cottage was located.

On one of these trips he was attacked by rheumatism in the knee, and upon reaching the cottage was entirely crippled. The disease moved rapidly, and about ten days later reached the heart. At this critical point, pneumonia, due, the physician said, to the rheumatism and the enfeebled condition in which it had left him, set in. From this complication his death resulted three weeks after the day of his first attack.

"Mention the name to his intimates of the class and a feeling of unspeakable sadness settles on them like a cloud. The announcement of his death may, without exaggeration, be said to have shocked the whole class. Stoics though we be, we cannot hear of the passing away of some strong, manly, generous classmate without a feeling akin to awe at the intense reality of death — always impressive, dignified, composed, touching impartially the rich and poor alike, the foolish and the wise, the strong and the weak. And so on a day death came to our classmate Felton, and we realized that he was no longer one of us. Howsoever much our laughter may ring out at the class reunions, his voice will take no part. His reminiscences of college days will play no part with ours in the years to come. He is dead, in his youth, in his great strength of early manhood.

"His memory to many of us, to all that knew him, is and will always be wholly pleasant. To those of us who met him daily, one and all, the recollection of him comes bringing, indeed, grief that we should have lost him, but joy that, amid all the falsity, vainglory, and selfishness about us in the present, we can number among the unalloyed joys of the past an intimate acquaintance with him, 'so gentle and so generous and so true.'"

John Taintor	July 30, 1902

Was not in business until '98, when he became vice-president of the National Iron Bank of Morristown, N. J. January 18, 1911, he became president of the same bank.

Has interested himself to a considerable extent in local politics, and has been Common Councilman and Alderman of Morristown, and Fish and Game Commissioner of New Jersey.

He is also the father of the first-born '86 child, and grandfather of the '86 grandchild, John Mayer, 2d.

'11, writes: "My life has been of such a humdrum character since 1906 that I do not feel that I have anything startling enough to say that would be of great interest to the class.

"I am engaged in the banking business here in Morristown, which takes up all my morning, and the afternoon I devote to the management of my farm, so that my daily struggle is to make enough money at the bank in the morning to pay the deficit that confronts me in the afternoon at the farm. Beyond this continual struggle my life has been very placid and uneventful; but it suits me, and I am not looking for any change in it."

'11, wrote: "The photographer tells me that not a few of our class have had no photographs taken since graduation, twenty-five years ago. A personal word from them is likely to reflect a profound revival of sentiment. The camera adjusts the lights and shadows of forgotten years on life's character-tapestry, while we play the boy of 1886, oblivious of the corrosive, if not dignifying, action of the sweep of time.

"I did not recognize my own picture, but politely declined the proofs, stating that through some mistake those of an elderly man had been substituted for mine. The situation was pitifully humorous.

"As my personal history for the past few years has been singularly devoid of interest, I offer you merely the above characteristic bit of sentiment.

A. . . Order, Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, and vice-president of the New England Alumni of the Phillips Exeter Academy.

War record: Mustered in May 9, 1898, as first lieutenant, Battery K, First Massachusetts Heavy Artillery Volunteers. Stationed at Fort Warren, and at Stage Fort, Gloucester, Massachusetts. Mustered out November 14, 1898.

'11, wrote: "Since the last class report was issued in 1906 I have at my own request been placed upon the retired list of the Officers of the Massachusetts Volunteer Militia with the rank of captain. I felt obliged to ask for retirement because my increasing law business did not permit me to devote as much time to military service as the Coast Artillery Corps requires. In fact, for an officer in the national guard at the present time to perform faithfully all the military service which both the United States and the State demand, it is almost imperative for him to be a man of leisure and without the necessity of working for a livelihood. The retired list is really a reserve list, and those who are on it must hold themselves in readiness to render service at any time.

"I have also joined the Boston City Club, a social and dining club where I meet many Harvard men; and the purposes of its foundation seem so pertinent to college life that I quote them here:

" 'This club is founded in the spirit of good fellowship, and every member of the club knows every other member without an introduction.'

"If students upon entering college could be made to feel that one of the purposes of going to college was to make friends and to promote good fellowship, and that they should know each other without an introduction, our colleges would accomplish a great deal more than they do now in the way of creating a better spirit of democracy. And I am one of those who believe that one of the chief ends of a college education is to teach, inculcate, and encourage pure democracy, where merit, loyalty, and character are the chief factors that count for recognition.

"I am still a member in nearly all the organizations mentioned in the last class report, and in several of them from time to time I have held various offices.

"While I am still unmarried and cannot have the pleasure of saying, as several of my classmates can, that I have a son either at Harvard or preparing for Harvard, yet perhaps for that very reason I have been able to take a deeper and more active interest in the welfare of boys generally than I otherwise could have done. Since graduation I have been the means of aiding upwards of twenty-five boys through Harvard. This does not mean necessarily that I have aided all of them financially, but it means getting acquainted with those boys who would not otherwise think of going to college, awakening in them the desire for a college education, and encouraging them to get that education in spite of all obstacles. And a word of encouragement counts a lot in this world, not only with youth, but with older people. In my estimation, graduates can do no better work for their alma mater than in stimulating in youthful minds a love for Harvard. Most, if not all of those who have gone to Harvard through my suggestion have completed their preparation at Exeter, and therefore at one stroke I was often enabled to help Exeter as well as Harvard. And I feel that a graduate of a large fitting school has many advantages over those who fit elsewhere. I have followed these 'protégés' of mine along from year to year, encouraging them wherever necessary, sometimes helping them in getting a position both in college and when they got out, and aiding them in every way possible. It has been not only a great satisfaction to me to feel that I was possibly doing something for Harvard, but it brought oftentimes splendid returns in pleasure to myself. And I feel that graduates generally can in no better way retain their youthful spirit than by doing just this sort of work, and keeping in sympathetic touch with younger college men. In fact, if I had leisure I would like to devote my whole time to just such work.

"I sometimes feel that married men do not do as much of this kind of service as they should; that they should interest themselves in boys outside of their own families. It would not require much time, and they would be doing a real service for Harvard, besides bringing pleasure to themselves. Harvard has grown in equipment so rapidly during the last decade that few graduates are well enough posted to be able to tell inquiring youth what wonderful opportunities she offers to all who seek an education. Every graduate should keep himself abreast of her growth so as to be able to inform others when necessary. Many of the leading students of other institutions have gone elsewhere merely because they did not know until too late that Harvard offered a wider field than any other institution in the very subject they desired to pursue. May we, the members of the class of '86, during the remainder of our lives work for Harvard as we have never worked before. May those of the class who have the means generously give of their bounty in the future as they have in the past. Let us cast our eyes about for young men of promise. Let us make their acquaintance, and then encourage them to get an education at Harvard. Let us carefully meditate on what we can do for our alma mater, and then let us do it and keep on doing it until the very last day of our lives.

"I forgot to say that I have also joined the Appalachian Mountain Club since the last report. They are about as strenuous a crowd as I ever came in contact with. They take mountain climbing trips summer and winter, climbing all sorts of mountains in all sorts of weather, and as one paper said a little while ago, they climb all day and dance all night. With them I have covered the White Mountain Range both summer and winter. Last winter, five of us succeeded in climbing Mount Washington via Tuckerman's Ravine, getting half way up on snow-shoes and then using creepers to get over the ice the remaining distance. It was a pretty hard day's trip, lasting from four o'clock in the morning until midnight, but the whole party of five came through without any serious results. We never will forget the climb up the head wall of Tuckerman's Ravine, which took several hours to negotiate. There was not much snow, but plenty of ice, and the angle at which we ascended was about eighty degrees for a distance of some fifteen hundred feet. We reached the summit just before sunset. The weather was clear and the view of the surrounding mountains covered with snow was beautiful in the extreme. I have not words with which to describe the beauty of the mountains as they appeared that afternoon, capped with snow and glistening in the sunlight."

“For a number of years before and after my City Hall appointments I was out of business and made three long European journeys. When not away from home much of my time was taken up by church and charity work, and for ten years I was Treasurer of Arlington St. Church, of which our classmate, Paul Frothingham, is minister. During the past eleven years I have been Chairman of the Unitarian Festival Committee, and for about the same length of time I have been a director of the Benevolent Fraternity of Churches, of which I am now Vice-President. As an officer or director of a number of philanthropic societies, I have expended a considerable amount of energy in giving musical and other entertainments for poor people and in helping at performances to raise funds for their benefit.

“A love for music has caused me to join a number of musical clubs, and perhaps the greatest honor that has come to me, and certainly one of the greatest pleasures, has been my election as President of the Apollo Club in 1904 and re-election every year since then. There are seventy-eight men in the chorus and the club has been successful financially as well as musically. Serving in the First Corps Cadets, I took part in all their theatrical performances from 1889 to 1900 and have more recently had a part in operettas given by other organizations.

“As in college days rowing has been my favorite exercise, and in the many races I have rowed a fair average of victories has come to me. My last race in an open regatta was a successful entry in the senior double sculls at Washington in 1906, but in 1909 and 1910 I was in the winning boat in scratch races in club regattas. Twice I have served as referee at the races between Harvard and Annapolis and have been an official at various other regattas.

“Before leaving college I began to take an active interest in Boston politics and since January, 1889, I have been a Republican politician in Boston. While I cannot point with pride to any great political achievement, I have tried to aid the cause of good government. Twenty-one times I have been elected to

"During the year 1905-06, while Winter was taking a year off, I enjoyed being a part of the department of Public Speaking at Harvard, and taught some men in the Law School and some in the Divinity School. In 1907 I was asked to have charge of Public Speaking here at James Millikin University at Decatur, Ill. The city has a population of 31,140, is thirty-nine miles east of Springfield, sits on a coal mine, and manufactures brass goods and soda fountains and some other things. The University (it should be called a college) has had a remarkable effect on the community, and therein lies the total interest for me. The transformation in real estate values, in respect for larger things and in personal culture is part payment for the three hardest years of work I ever did. All school salaries are very small; all school work is abominably heavy.

"I had hopes of announcing a change to some state university, but delaying this letter to you does not seem to bring the appointment.

"The world seems immeasurably sadder and lonelier since the departure of Carpenter and Lamont and Barnes. I am indebted (I am sure the class will appreciate this fact) to Lee for a Turkish bath at the University Club in Chicago, and for a fine dinner. Next summer I may do some teaching in the rooms of his Law School."

SELWYN LEWIS HARDING

Born April 22, 1864, at Everett, Mass.

Father's Name: William Penn Harding

Mother's Maiden Name: Abby Moore

Died January 7, 1887

Selwyn Lewis Harding, the son of William Penn and Abby (Moore) Harding, was born at Everett, Mass., April 22, 1864. He died at his home in Cambridge, in January, 1887, after a short attack of appendicitis.

Harding was a man of unusual ability, and the record he made in school and college was a brilliant one. He received his preparation for Harvard at the Boston Latin school, where he was known as one of the hardest working scholars in his class. He was graduated from the school with high honor, and received a Franklin Medal for distinguished excellence in scholarship. Upon entering college Harding at once took a place among the leading scholars of the class. In his freshman year he was one of those upon whom Deturs were conferred. In the second-year honor examinations of his sophomore year he was awarded highest honors in Mathematics, and in his senior year he won honors in Physics. He was a Bowdoin prizeman, receiving this distinction for his essay on "The Relations of Forest to Rainfall and the Water Supply." At graduation he received his degree "summa cum laude," obtaining also honorable mention in Physics, Mathematics, and English Composition. He was a member of the Phi Beta Kappa, and of the Delta Upsilon societies. At the time of his death he was engaged in the study of advanced physics, in which he had obtained remarkable results.

Owing to his devotion to his work Harding was, perhaps, not brought into contact with a large number of the class, but those who were fortunate enough to be numbered among his friends knew him as a thoroughly manly fellow and a pleasant companion. In his death the class met with an irreparable loss, for in his life he had shown the promise of a useful and honorable future.

By the will of his father, William Penn Harding, who died in 1910, a bequest of $5,000 was made for the establishment of a scholarship in Harvard College to be known as the Selwyn L. Harding Scholarship.

Harvard, Class of 1886

Since graduation has been in business in Cincinnati, O., at first with a tannery, then with the Cincinnati Ice Manufacturing and Cold Storage Co., and later managing real estate for his father.

'11, wrote: "Huddleston, with his usual modesty, asks among other things for a photograph of each member of the class. I wish him joy. I had that job once when I was Chairman of the photograph committee at graduation. I remember with great pleasure the manner in which Jim Frye changed my notice sent to the Crimson, couched in dignified terms, to read—'Get your picture taken and avoid the rush in the spring'—and how he then proceeded to comment editorially on his revised edition and on the prospect of a mad rush to get into the studio. Jim always was playful. I hope you have all responded cheerfully and promptly.

"The idea, however, of asking one of my age and disposition to walk into a studio in cold blood and politely request to be perpetuated on glass is almost too much. I hope you all appreciate the sacrifice I am making as well as the beauty of the result.

"He asks, secondly, for a correction of the clipping from the last class report. If I should start doing this you would not know it. As I re-read it the facts appear in the main correct, but the English! shades of English 4!

"Item three, filling out of form is dead easy and was done immediately.

"Fourth item is a corker. What kind of a letter does he mean? Probably a serious one telling of my views of life, affairs of the nation or nations, theories of the universe, a treatise on the fourth dimension and other such handy information. I admit that such is beyond me and I decline flatly. Perhaps he wants the story of my life in three chapters told as by Siegfried in Götterdämmerung. If he expects such a tale of a checkered career as Siegfried told he will be disappointed. Had I led such a life as the gentleman in question, and had I such a set of mixed up relations, I would not tell it. I am more careful about speaking of such skeletons. I conceal them in their usual abiding place.

“But to return to the request as I propose to understand it, I have been in business here in Cincinnati since graduation, finally landing as my father’s assistant, secretary, right hand man, or something of that sort, in the care of his real estate, besides attending to a good many other things. Upon his death in 1902 I took active charge of his estate, and have been building it up, erecting several large fireproof buildings. My other interests, however, take so much time and attention that I am more on them than on estate matters. Can talk to you — individually — on quite a variety of lines of business. My task now is to avoid new jobs, not seek them.

“In 1909 I acquired a third boy, born, like the other two, in March, so now I have three ‘March hares’ — a third of a baseball team, and I think an attractive bunch, aged respectively sixteen, seven, and two. But I will stop on that subject and will not offer to show you their photographs.

“For pleasures, well, a fellow’s family is his pleasure, especially when one boy is beginning to be ambitious to beat his dad at tennis. Am so busy that almost all but evening pleasures are precluded except when away from home. Have taken my whole flock away now for two summers, and have been with them a good deal and rather like it.

“I had my first real taste of sickness about the first of the year. Was in bed with the grippe and the mumps for a week, and enjoyed the services of a trained nurse. I felt like a hero. Some of the services performed by the nurse were rather startling to me at first.

“I will admit that I have some theories on a great many subjects, — business, political, æsthetic, and moral, but I would bore you to go into them. I have had the same experience, I presume, that most of you have had, viz.: that as I grow older

I find that half the troubles do not happen and the worst does not always come to pass. The wider and more comprehensive view of affairs is a source of satisfaction — and profit.

“I am glad at the prospect of seeing once more those who return, and miss those I will never see again. — I was going off into a dissertation on the serious changes we see in each other, on the passing of college day jealousies, heart burnings, etc., but I guess I will not.

“As I write this, toward the end of February, my faithful chum, Mrs. Harrison, is just beginning to get better after a serious illness of almost two months. I sincerely hope she will be able to be with me on the occasion of our reunion and hear directly of, if not see, our doings.

“Again, I am glad at the prospect of seeing you all.”

'92-'93, teaching in Detroit, Mich., and organist of the First Unitarian Church.

'93-'97, in charge of the Music Department, Burlington Institute, Burlington, Ia.

'97-'98, director of the Carleton College School of Music at Northfield, Minn.

'98-'06, in Boston, part of the time on the faculty of the Faelton Pianoforte School, and teaching in Quincy Mansion School, Wollaston.

'07-'08, student Andover Theological Seminary.

Harvard, Class of 1886

'09-'10, pastor of Tyngsboro Evangelical Church, Tyngsboro, Mass.

'10-'11, professor of music, Georgetown College, Georgetown, Ky.

"Our genial secretary asks for a personal letter from each of us. It would be immensely flattering to think that my movements and observations were of interest to the whole class. But I know very well that if I were to take pencil and paper and figure it out, I should find that there were between three and four men who cared the value of a postage stamp for anything I had to say. These three or four can take my communication for what it is worth, and the rest of you can lay it on Huddleston. And, of course, he meant it all right, so don't be too hard on him.

"Is it not rather cruel, though, to make a man reveal what seems like a record of vacillation, for which he can offer but little justification? Those of you who like psychological problems might enjoy a chance to study one, even in the person of your humble servant, if you could do it at close range, but there is not much profit in trying it through the medium of a brief (?) letter. Here are the chief facts. I gave up the profession which I had followed for twenty years with a fair measure of success, in order to go into the ministry. I spent two wholly delightful years at Andover Seminary, just before it was moved from Andover Hill to Cambridge. Those of you who do not, or did not, know the old town of Andover, have missed an experience to be coveted. I think the man was right who said that there was more plain living and high thinking in Andover than in any other place since the days of Concord's greatest renown. Add the beauty of the natural surroundings to the charm of the society, and you have a place where one can find the best joys in life.

"From Andover I went to Tyngsboro, on the Merrimac just above Lowell, where I held my first pastorate. Here there was also an abundance of natural beauty, while the society was — different. Good, honest, plain people, you understand. During the two years in Andover and the first year in Tyngsboro I never missed my music. Then there came a change, the awakening of something that had been asleep. As a result, here I am in Georgetown College as professor of music, and I suppose I shall never be anything but a teacher of music for the rest of my days. The most curious part of it all is, — to me, at least, — that the theological training and experience are far from valueless in my musical career. I suppose the fact is that almost any sort of work or study helps in the making of a man, provided he goes at it in earnest. And the more of a man one is, the better the quality of his work, be he ditch digger or president of the United States. Incidentally I have learned to have a good deal more sympathy for the ministers. Nobody knows how hard their job is, or how hard they try to achieve the impossible, who has not tried it himself. Which is the case with other occupations, I suspect. And so, best wishes to you all."

'11, wrote: "This is my thirteenth year as a Latin teacher in the Boys' High School. My life is uneventful. I love my home and my school, and pass little time elsewhere, except in summer, when I return to Maine, and live for two months by the sea. Our summer home is a comfortable cottage on Squirrel Island, forty miles east of Portland. Here we rest from the cares of the city. Here we wander with childhood companions, along the sunny slopes, and picnic on the rocks, and so renew the friendships formed long ago. We love to sit on the cliffs and watch the passing sail; and just as the distant shallop is ever an object of wonder and mystery, passing all too quickly into the sunset, so this glad summer life on the enchanted isle, filled as it is with all the mystical charm of sea and shore, passes all too soon into the realm of sweet memories. Come and dip salt with us; and as you recline on our veranda and cut the leaves of the last Atlantic, you, too, will perhaps feel like singing with the companions of Ulysses, 'We will return no more; our island home is far beyond the wave; we will no longer roam.'"

Robert Wortley Hogg was born August 4, 1864, in New York, N. Y., and died at St. Nazaire, France, October 30, 1899. In college he was a member of the Institute and of the Hasty Pudding. After graduation he spent a year traveling in Europe, and then entered the employ of A. C. McClurg & Co., publishers, in Chicago. While there he lived for two years with F. S. Churchill, '86. His health was poor, and he was compelled at times to give up all employment for a considerable period. Churchill writes: "A more kind-hearted, considerate fellow I never knew — qualities which came out noticeably when our first baby died; always willing and even anxious to save any trouble or to oblige in any way possible. He played the piano with much feeling, but carelessly, and with no effort, reading his music as I would read a novel. His love of books was another marked trait, and he was thoroughly conversant with the best English and French literature."

'96 to the present time, treasurer of the Hood Rubber Co., which he organized in '96.

Clubs or Societies since graduation: The Country Club, Brookline (secretary '02-'05); University Club, Boston; Massachusetts Automobile Club, Boston; Sepuit Club, Osterville, Mass.; Harvard Club, Boston; Harvard Club, N. Y.; Beverly Yacht Club.

Enjoys out-of-door life, plays golf and tennis, runs his automobile (a Pierce-Arrow), and sails a small boat.

'11, wrote: "My real business life commenced on August 1, 1886, in the employ of my father's company, the Boston Rubber Company, although I had spent the greater part of my college summer vacations in the factories of that company.

"In 1887, on the death of my elder brother, I became the secretary of that Company.

"In 1892 the Company was taken over by the United States Rubber Company, as one of their constituent companies. In April, 1896, the business of the Boston Rubber Company was transferred to other factories owned by the United States Rubber Company, the factories of the Boston Rubber Company were closed permanently, and I was dismissed with slight ceremony.

"But during those ten years I had occupied many positions, including the offices of treasurer and superintendent.

"In July, 1896, in company with a younger brother, I started the Hood Rubber Company, with a factory at Watertown, Mass., with which Company I still continue as treasurer. That company has prospered, and it may be interesting to state that it now has the largest rubber footwear factory in the world, producing daily 50,000 pairs of rubber boots and shoes, besides automobile tires, and has over 4000 employees.

"My pleasures include enjoyment of all kinds of sport and games, especially out-of-door sports. The love for the sports enjoyed at college has increased each year, and my health has been benefited by golf, some tennis, and sailing. My Massachusetts State Golf Association handicap is 5; I can still beat my son at tennis; and I have two Herreshoff yachts—a 15-footer and a 21-footer, built for the restricted classes of the Beverly Yacht Club of Buzzards Bay. I am also fond of automobiling and for four consecutive years I have taken an automobile to England and Scotland for several weeks' golfing. And I manage to enjoy a month's vacation South during the winter.

"I have lived at Warren Street, Brookline, since 1898.

"I was secretary of The Country Club at Brookline for three years, and am now serving my ninth year as a member of its Executive Committee.

"I have never been interested in politics, nor have I ever held any public office.

"I have attended each Class Commencement Reunion since our Tenth, and hope that nothing will interfere with my attendance for many years to come."

A., 7th Regiment, March 16, 1894; was appointed assistant surgeon, of the grade of captain, 7th Regiment, November 6, 1895; resigned, receiving full and honorable discharge April 24, 1907.

Is a member of the Century, Harvard, and Barnard clubs.

'11, wrote: "The last five years have meant for me personally an increasing tendency for private work to fall into the more restricted channels of diseases of the chest and abdomen, a regretted but necessary withdrawal from much of my laboratory study, from teaching, and from military duties, and an increasing amount of committee business largely in 'civic' and 'social service' fields. While during most of the year the days seem all too short, vacations have been a little longer, and the delight of the rush of midwinter is certainly equalled by the fun of the time when there is not a thought of medical or social problems. I am not a sportsman, but I have held a rod with luck attending, and sailed or motored a vacation through, and I have yet to do the same thing in successive vacations, or to find one not magnificent in experience and glorious in retrospect. My fortune is good; my family grows; I would cast a ring into the sea — but my misfortune is clear; — I still do not see enough of those who are making '86."

fitting schools in New England. He entered Harvard in the fall of 1882, and graduated in regular course in June, 1886.

His frank and pleasant, though quiet, manners won him a wide acquaintance among his classmates, many of whom, as they came to know him intimately, found in him a friend to love and respect for his sterling qualities and his good fellowship. In college affairs he felt a healthy interest, and in various fields of undergraduate life he took active part. He was a member of the Institute of 1770, and the Hasty Pudding — taking part in the Club theatricals — and the Art Club.

After graduation he entered the employ of Messrs. J. A. and W. Bird & Company, of Boston, dealers in dyestuffs, and remained with them until his death, with the exception of three months in 1888 when he was clerk in the Bank of Redemption. For several years he took an active part in local politics, serving on ward and city committees, and being secretary of the Republican Ward and City Committee of Boston in 1897. In 1895, 1896, 1897, and 1898 he was a member of the Boston Common Council, in which body he did excellent work. In his last year of service in the Council he was the Republican candidate for president of that body.

His interest in his class and in his classmates remained strong through life. In all class gatherings — until ill health forbade — he was a constant and welcome participant. His long illness was borne with a quiet and cheerful courage characteristic of the man.

The next fall I entered college and after a very uneventful and fair average course graduated with the class.

"In the fall of 1886 I entered the office of Wm. G. Preston, Architect, where I stayed for five years, after which for a year and a half I was employed in several architects' offices, among them McKim, Mead and White's.

"In December, 1892, I entered the office of Peabody & Stearns, Architects, and have been there ever since. My work has been for the most part very interesting and I have made many pleasant friends.

"I have traveled very little outside of the eastern states. In 1890, in company with F. W. Smith, '86, I visited the Windward Islands, going as far south as Trinidad. Later, with my wife, I have visited the Maritime Provinces but have not yet been abroad, though we have plans for next year.

"My chief recreations are — on the physical side, golf, in which I have not distinguished myself, but which I enjoy immensely; and on the intellectual side (if I may so distinguish it), an attempt to solve certain questions which the world at large settled long ago and which were perhaps not settled right. Among these the authorship of the Shakesperian plays has become a matter of interest to me, and some people (among them our classmate Baldwin) think I may be able shortly to show something worth while. As I am neither a strict 'Baconian' nor an orthodox 'Shakesperian,' and look for light wherever it may be found, possibly some light will come.

"I have held no offices except as a member of the Board of Trustees of our local Library and Hospital and of other similar boards.

Charles Estus Lamb was born October 10, 1863, at Forestdale, R. I. His preparation for college was received at Rev. Charles Miller's school in Providence. During his four college years as a member of '86, he was chiefly interested in art courses, and this interest he maintained throughout his life. He was not a member of any college society and did not mingle much with his fellows. After graduation he spent a year in the Harvard Law School and then went abroad. Relieved by a sufficient income from the necessity of steady work, he spent his life in the pleasantest surroundings he could find, especially in Italy and along the Riviera, studied art, and enjoyed himself. On October 31, 1899, he was married in Paris, France, to Jeanne Marie Françoise Voillemier. There were no children. His visits to this country were rare, but it was on one of these visits to his home in Providence that he was overtaken by a fatal cerebral hemorrhage, and died August 23, 1905. He was buried in the cemetery at Auteuil, Paris.

Hammond Lamont, the son of the Rev. Thomas and Caroline Deuel (Jayne) Lamont was born at Monticello, New York, January 19, 1864, and died as the result of a surgical operation in New York, May 6, 1909. He prepared for college in Albany, and went through Harvard with the class of '86, graduating as one of its best scholars, a member of Phi Beta Kappa, and Ivy orator of the class. While in college he was one of the editors of the Crimson and of the Lampoon, and a member of the Signet and O. K. After graduation he turned naturally to journalism and spent two years in Albany as reporter and city editor on the Argus, the Evening Union, and the Morning Express. He then went to Washington for two years and was attached part of the time to the Tacoma Ledger and part to the Seattle Post-Intelligencer.

When in 1892 President Eliot visited Seattle his attention was drawn to Lamont and an offer of an instructorship in the English department at Harvard followed. Lamont accepted and filled this position for three years and then in 1895 joined the faculty of Brown University, at first as associate professor, and in 1898 as full professor of Rhetoric. In 1900 he accepted the position of managing editor of the Evening Post which he held for six years with marked success. On July 1, 1906, on the retirement from the editorship of the Nation of Wendell Phillips Garrison, Lamont succeeded him and continued in this position until his end. Shortly before his death he had received flattering offers from Williams College and from a Western State University to resume his professorial career, and he had during his connection with the Evening Post declined similar offers from Brown University and Cornell.

On June 20, 1900 he was made an honorary A.M. by Brown University. He edited several college text books and published in 1906 a book entitled "English Composition."

On May 14, 1891, he was married at Nyack, New York, to Lillian Mann, and she and two children survive him.

The following tribute appeared in the New York Evening Post:

With the deepest sorrow and an overwhelming sense of personal loss, we record the death of Mr. Hammond Lamont. Here we can only strive for a word of appreciation, necessarily grief-stricken and broken. Such qualities as Mr. Lamont possessed make his friends feel that silence and bowed heads are the best form of tribute. Especially under the first shock of his unexpected and untimely end, cut off cruelly in the meridian of his powers and usefulness, are his associates inclined simply to say:

"What else in life seems piteous any more,
After such pity?"

Mr. Lamont had an intellect that ranged free and wide. His mental vigor was what first impressed men making his acquaintance. Penetrating, incisive, clear, and sane, his reason was a fine organ of truth. His favorite studies and largest attainments were in English literature, of which he possessed extensive knowledge, kept in order by a judgment of extraordinary balance and clarity. In educational matters, he was thoroughly versed. His writings upon the problems of school and college and university compelled attention; and his advice and assistance were often sought by college authorities. Known by a multitude of university men, he was valued by them all. But Mr. Lamont had also read eagerly and thought deeply about all the great questions that press upon a modern man with a soul above the clods. In politics, in morals, in that mystery and awe of existence which we call religion, his active mind had sought out fact and built up conviction. And his intellectual honesty was so complete, his detection of fallacy and delusion so instant, his hatred of sham and lies so absolute, that for him the discovery of the truth was the same thing as embracing it, his translation of thought into motive and action being instinctive and instantaneous. It would never have been necessary for a Socrates to bid Mr. Lamont "follow the argument." He was always following it to the end, sweet or bitter. It was this intellectual stanchness of the man, combined with his firm-fibered character and loyalty to friendship, that bound like-minded men to him with hooks of steel.

Of his actual achievement, we would not speak in terms that he would have thought excessive. We merely note that in his varied work for the Evening Post he displayed executive ability and skill as a writer, both in a high degree; while his editing of the Nation, to which he had given himself with the energy and ungrudging devotion characteristic of him, received the most ample recognition and praise from the judicious. Such consolation as those who mourn him may derive from the thought that his life was filled with militant and honorable striving, they may lay to heart without a single mental reserve. But we know not to-day what healing there is for those who are struck down by his remediless loss, and the tragedy of his end.

Hammond Lamont is dead, and what a loss is ours! Gone is the witty companion, the clear thinker, the loyal friend; gone the idealist, ambitious for causes, helpful to others, modest for himself alone. He was a journalist of rare endowment; when he taught it was as a journalist. His aim for others as for himself was first and ever first clearness and honesty of thought and expression. English literature he loved. His library, now a memorial library in the possession of Brown University, was especially rich in works showing the development of English prose. The English language to him was a tool which everyone ought to use and to use well. He had little patience with uninformed thought and slovenly or dishonest reasoning, and his criticism of both was fervent and scathing; but the very vigor of his just denunciation of the inferior thing made him finally the idol of his students.

It was a pleasure to him to hold the position of editor of the New York Evening Post. It was certain from the first that, he would ultimately be, what he later became, the editor of the Nation. In this last position he inherited an ideal, but he made it his own; he received a policy but he mastered and enlarged it; and not content with striving to give always his own best, he sought to inspire every contributor and worker with the same purpose. That conscientious determination to extend his personal supervision to every part of the journal so that every issue should be as nearly as possible flawless, would have exhausted greater forces even than his. He had won the blue ribbon of journalism, but the tension broke down even his gay spirits, even his incomparable enthusiasm, even his abounding energy.

But life in Chicago has a good deal of the humdrum and monotony of a boiler shop, and that is where I have spent my entire time since 1906, with the exception of brief vacations, and one long one in 1909 to Yellowstone National Park, a trip which alone was worth coming to earth to take. If you have n't yet been there you ought to go, and don't fail to go in by the Cody road. It will prove a case of the side show being as attractive as the big tent.

"Lloyd, you know, is a philosopher, and I was pleased to learn from his colleagues in Ann Arbor that he was regarded most highly not only as a teacher but as a good fellow as well. I passed two very happy days with these old classmates. As I grow older my attachment for the Class and its members increases, and I wish I were brought more into contact with them. They say that sooner or later everybody passes through Chicago, — I fancy somewhat as in early times Christians were supposed to go through Purgatory, but apparently that is not true of '86 men. About the only non-resident one I have had the pleasure of meeting here lately has been Gunnison, who is located at Decatur. I should be happy to have any '86 man passing through this city to make known his presence here. I won't call the police or turn the dog on him, but take him in.

"Excuse this long letter. You know I don't write you often, and the big self-addressed envelope you furnish will hold it all."

During the college years he earned by outside work enough to pay his expenses at Cambridge, yet the Freshman year he rowed on the class crew, and throughout the college course his standing was good. In his "Class Life" he wrote: "I have paid my way through college. Was away in the West during my junior year to get money to pay my senior year's expenses." After graduation he became a clerk on the Union Pacific Railroad, and later became a teacher, at first in the Evening High School and later in the Bristol Academy at Taunton. April 13, 1888, he was married in Raynham, Mass., to Helena Evelyn Wilbur, daughter of Silas Everett and Emily Adelaide Wilbur. He died in Taunton, May 17, 1889, of diphtheria.

Lowell Lincoln, Jr., was born in Boston on December 15, 1865, and died September 19, 1906, in his forty-first year. His family in all its branches was of old New England stock. His father, who had been a merchant in Boston, came to New York some thirty years ago to make it his home, and Lowell himself prepared for college at a private school in the latter city. On entering Harvard he at once took one of the more prominent positions in the class, both by reason of his kindly disposition and his happy nature, and also by reason of his interest in athletics. He was respected by all, and loved by those who knew him well. His standing in the class was so successful that he was graduated with high honors.

Harvard, Class of 1886

Upon graduation he went into the office of Blake Brothers in New York, and took charge of their note-brokerage department. After being there for some years, he joined the note-brokerage firm of Charles Hathaway & Company as one of their partners. He remained a member of that firm until his death.

In November, 1896, he married Miss Anna Steward of New York City, and she and three children survive him. His life in New York during the twenty years which succeeded his graduation was the typical life of a young and successful New York man. His business and social connections were gradually extending, and the same qualities which he had first shown at college, united to a character of the utmost uprightness and integrity, were bringing him further and further ahead all the time in his subsequent career. He was always an enthusiastic devotee of his college, and followed its fortunes with unflagging interest.

A year or so before his death he broke down, largely as a result of overwork. It was expected that rest would better his condition, but the hope did not bring the realization. He gradually grew worse; and, finally, some four or five months before he died, he had to give up active work. He will be mourned by all who knew him as a delightful companion and a warm and faithful friend.

Mother's Maiden Name: Hannah Maria Child

Business: Artist

Died August 8, 1895

Frank Anthony Luques, the son of Judge Samuel W. and Hannah M. Luques, was born December 3, 1863, in Biddeford, Maine, and was drowned in the Saco River, August 8, 1895. He was prepared for college at Phillips-Exeter, and after graduation worked steadily to gain the power of expressing himself as an artist. At first a member of the Students' Art League in New York, he later entered the Academie Julian in Paris. After his return to America in the summer of 1890, he had a studio in Boston for two years, but at the end of that time went abroad again, and continued his studies in Paris and Rome. In the fall of 1894 he opened a studio in New York, and had really entered upon his professional career at the time of his death.

"Luques had come to that point in his development where he was about to express in the terms of his art what he had in him to say. Long years of patient study in the ateliers of Paris and Rome and in his Boston studio had given him the needed grasp of technique, and at last he had been turning his mind to the painting of pictures rather than studies of color or light and shade. As he was not forced to seek the pretty and so salable, he had held himself firmly to that work which seemed to him likely to lead him forward to truest expression and the deepest grasp of his art. Had he lived it seems probable that he would have joined the ranks of impressionists.

"His last trip abroad in 1894-95 was given over to study for a large picture, which he was to call 'The Feast of Glaucus.' Two studies for this remain. One has the Pompeian interior as he painted it in carefully on the spot. The other is a more advanced study of the figures. He hoped to do much with this picture.

"The rest of his work, which is owned in and about Boston or by his family in Biddeford, Me., consists of a few landscapes in oil, many sketches at home and abroad in water and oil, figure studies, and some charming work in pen and ink, sketches, or studies for illustration.

"His was a soul of singular purity and gentleness and a mind of fortitude and strength. He was a good son and a loyal friend. To those of us who were nearest him, his sudden passing beyond brought an abiding sense of loss."

Born July 11, 1863, at Cincinnati, O.

Father's Name: Henry Mervyn Magill

Died December 11, 1906

Henry Waters Magill, a son of Henry Mervyn and Sarah Ellicott Magill, was born July 11, 1863, at Cincinnati, O. He prepared for college at White & Sikes' Preparatory School, at Walnut Hill, Cincinnati; entered Harvard College with the Class of '86, and took his degree with credit in the regular course.

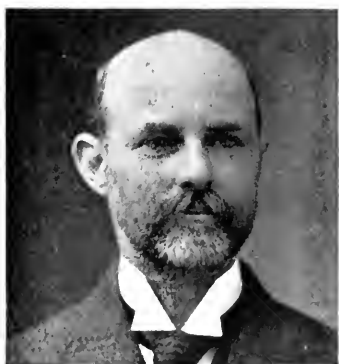

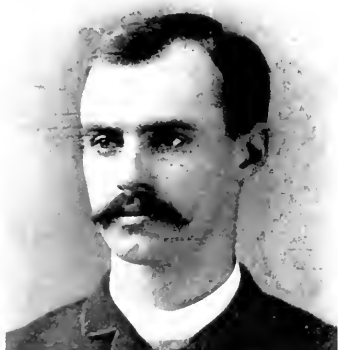

Upon leaving college, he went immediately into the fire insurance business at Chicago, and after a few years became district manager, at Chicago, of the Phoenix Insurance Company of Hartford, which position he held until his death. It may be fairly said that he was one of the most successful and respected men in his line of business in Chicago. At one time treasurer of the Chicago Board of Fire Underwriters, he also served upon many Committees of said Board. In all his business relations he was a man of the strictest integrity, and stood for the most honorable methods.

He never married. He lived for several years prior to his death, in the winter, at the Lakota Hotel, in Chicago, and in the summer at the Onwentsia Club, at Lake Forest, Illinois. In addition to the Onwentsia Club, he belonged to the University Club, the Harvard Club, and the Chicago Athletic Association, all of Chicago.

Harry Magill was unusually modest and retiring, and only those who were privileged to know him well appreciated his clear mind and fine qualities. It is a pleasure to recall that, in spite of his modesty, he succeeded in his business because of his

At the Hospital laboratory I run a training school for young men interested in Pathology. This month, besides the five regular assistants, I have five graduates, and thirteen 4th year men, enough to keep any one busy and out of mischief.

"The great advantage of the Hospital laboratory is that it furnishes pathological material for study. I have been working for several years on a pathological histology written from the biological point of view. It is based largely on the material which I have collected and studied during the past fourteen years while in charge of the laboratory, and will be finished, I hope, this year.

"I have found two durable satisfactions in life so far; one is in training young men how to work in Pathology so that they can acquire in three or four years what it took me fifteen years to dig out for myself. It is a great pleasure to see these men obtaining prominent school and laboratory positions and filling them with credit. The other satisfaction is in making some new observation in Pathology and in carrying it through to its logical conclusion.

Business: Physician

Degree: M.D., 1891

Died February 22, 1896

Henry Cowles Miller was born March 19, 1867, in Chelsea, Mass. His parents moved to Melrose in 1868, and the son attended the Melrose schools, and entered Harvard with '86. After graduation with honors in modern languages he went to Europe and began the study of medicine in Paris, but returned home in six months on account of the illness of his father. In 1887 he received the appointment of Professor of Modern Languages in the Cathedral School at Garden City, L. I. He held this position for two and a half years, and then entered the Harvard Medical School. In November, 1891, he received the appointment of Medical Examiner in the Pension Office in Washington, but returned to Boston the following June, passed the examinations, and received the M.D. degree. In January, 1893, he had an attack of pneumonia from which he never recovered. The following May he went to Asheville, where he remained eight months, part of that time acting as assistant physician at the "Wenah Sanitarium." From there he went to Santa Barbara, Cal., and so far recovered his health that he began practice, but soon broke down again, and after a last trial for improvement on the plains of Texas, came back to his mother's birthplace in Kennebunkport, Me., where he died February 22, 1896.

Henry Miller's constant, cheery good temper, his quiet persistence in thinking for himself, and acting as he thought, won him hearty respect and liking from all who knew him. By that sturdy, though vain, three years' fight for his health his qualities were tested to the utmost, and never before had they rung more true. His letters from the West were constantly hopeful and plucky, and when far from well he never was wanting if he could give a helpful word to another. J. H. H.

In the death of Henry C. Miller the Class of '86 has suffered a loss which will be felt most keenly by those who knew him best, but which is common in a certain sense to all members of the class. His career would have been so distinguished as to enhance the prestige of the class, and his example would have been increasingly stimulating to all of us. The splendid promise of his youth was already redeeming itself in a life full of good works when he was stricken down by a merciless, wasting disease. His fortitude and strength of will were strikingly shown thereafter, as, unflinchingly and uncomplainingly, he held death at arm's length for many months. Dr. Miller was not so widely known during our college days as some other members of the class, because he did not live in Cambridge throughout the course, and because his scholastic zeal outran his social bent. He made many warm friends, however, and every one was attracted by his brilliant mental powers and his engaging personality. One of the wittiest of men, he was at the same time one of the kindest, and he had a woman's delicacy and thoughtfulness for others in even the smallest things. His nature was as lovable as his character was noble, and few men have combined in richer measure such graces of mind and heart and intellect.

CHARLES LEWIS MILLS

Born June 3, 1864, at Corning, N. Y.

Father's Name: Ellsworth Daggett Mills

Mother's Maiden Name: Eliza Amelia Wellington

Business: Law

Died June 7, 1890

Charles Lewis Mills was born at Corning, N. Y., June 3, 1864, and died there of consumption June 7, 1890. His early education was received at the Corning Free Academy. After graduation at Harvard he began the study of law in Corning. In February, 1887, he was elected Justice of the Peace, and was said to be "the youngest incumbent of that office the county ever had." He served as Justice, at the same time pursuing his legal studies, and was admitted to practice as an attorney and counsellor-at-law in all the courts of the State in January, 1888. His subsequent life was a struggle for health.

Records of the Class

" Mills died June 7, 1890. In the early autumn of 1888, after brilliantly passing his law examinations, he was compelled by his failing health to go South, where he remained, at Aiken and Asheville, with the exception of a few weeks spent at home, until January, 1890. His condition meanwhile grew steadily worse. It was determined, as a last resort, to take him on a long sea voyage. He started late in January, but made no improvement. He reached home again in April, and there he lingered on until early in June, when he fell quietly asleep.

" I hardly know what to say about him. In one sense his life seems wholly unfinished. And yet it is not quite so. For in the little time he had among his own people he developed remarkably. He gave evidence of ability of no common order, and he earned the unaffected respect of the entire community in which he lived. He did enough, at any rate, to show that his future was assured. And if this seems but little to those who knew him best it is only because they alone know how great was his ability, how strong and fine and sweet his character, and how splendid the possibilities that apparently lay within his grasp.

" Accomplishment alone, however, is a poor measure of a man's life. Courage, strength, loyalty, generosity, self-command are of some value. Character is something. But what Mills' early life had only shadowed forth his long illness brought out in clear relief. During those weary months he exhibited perfect self-command. He never faltered, never complained, never lost courage. He faced his fate with perfect knowledge and serenity. And when the end came he died as he had lived, thinking to the last so much of others that he forgot himself."

CHARLES HENRY MINOT, Jr.

Born November 9, 1862, at Boston, Mass.

Father's Name: Charles Henry Minot

Mother's Maiden Name: Maria Josephine Grafton

Died November 30, 1887

Harvard, Class of 1886

Charles Henry Minot, Jr., the son of Charles Henry and Maria Josephine (Grafton) Minot, was born in Boston, November 9, 1862, and died at his home on Marlborough St., on November 30, 1887, after a very short illness, from typhoid fever.

Minot was fitted for college at the preparatory school of Mr. Hopkinson in Boston. Both in school and college he was deservedly popular, and he was abundantly endowed with those qualities which go to make the companionable man. Among the college societies of which he was a member were the Institute of 1770, the Hasty Pudding Club, the Alpha Delta Phi, and the A. D. Club. He also sang with the Glee Club for several years.

After graduation Minot entered the Harvard Law School, in which, at the time of his death he was a member of the second-year class. Here he made many new friends. On receiving the news of his sudden death his class in the school met and appointed a committee to take appropriate action. This committee reported the following resolution:

"In behalf of the members of the second-year class in the Harvard Law School, we wish to give expression to the regret felt at the sudden death of Charles Henry Minot, Jr.

"His loss will be a severe one to the many friends he had made by his unfailing courtesy and kindly disposition.

"To the members of his family we extend our most sincere sympathy in their deep affliction."

'04 to present, assistant professor in Surgical Pathology, Harvard Medical School.

Since '05, again in private practice in Boston.

Has had charge of the Nine for the last eight years.

For the past three years has been a member of the Athletic Committee.

Is visiting surgeon of Boston City Hospital.

Clubs or Societies since graduation: St. Botolph Club and Boylston Club, Boston; Massachusetts Medical Society; the American Association of Pathologists and Bacteriologists; the Society of Clinical Surgery and the American Medical Association. Is a member of the Committee appointed by the Athletic Association of Harvard Graduates to consider changes in football to meet the objections urged against the game.

'11, wrote: "Since the last letter I wrote for the Class Report, things have gone on very quietly without any marked change. I am still a practising surgeon and teaching at the Harvard Medical School. As the years have gone by titles have changed a little, but my duties not much. I have now become visiting surgeon at the Boston City Hospital. I was reappointed assistant professor of Surgical Pathology in 1909, and in December, 1910, was made assistant professor of Surgery. This is a case where two halves do not quite make a whole, but the appointment of assistant professor of Surgery gives me more clinical teaching to do, in addition to the laboratory teaching which I have always done. The teaching combined in that way is vastly more agreeable.

"I still maintain my interest in athletics and have continued to be member of the Athletic Committee at Cambridge. I have for the past five years been surgeon in charge of the football Eleven. As you will see by the titles of some of the articles I have published, there are several reports on the physical aspect of football. I have recently been appointed a member of the Graduate Baseball Committee, which consists of five members, and which is a prominent body in the control of the policy for the development of the baseball Nine. You see my vocations and my avocations are about the same. I attended the reunion of the '85 Nine last spring and enjoyed it immensely. Claflin was, as he always has been, a manager unexcelled and most efficient, and it was a perfect delight to see the same efficient methods that he used when he was an undergraduate.

"When I wrote to you last I had just given up my position as the head of the Croft Fund and resumed my surgical practice. It has increased each year. My boy goes to college in two years."

'11, wrote: " 'A personal letter to the Class' sounds formidable, for it is not what we say at our reunions, but what we feel when we come together. For most of us the best part of our life work is behind us. Many of us have failed to accomplish the things that seemed to us best worth doing. But I think it would be hard to find a body of men who have put up a better fight, each in his way, for the things that are most worth while, than a Harvard Class twenty-five years after graduation. And so, from our own efforts and the knowledge experience has given us of how difficult real achievement is, we find it easy to understand what the other fellow's life has meant to him, and we come together in a fellowship of sincere endeavor, not reproaching the past for the prizes we have not won, but looking forward to the years that are still left us to use well what we have secured in insight and power. May we all feel that the game is still young, and play it to the limit! "

Mother's Maiden Name: Marianne Cabot Lee

Business: Banker.

Marriage: Date, June 4, 1891. Place, Boston, Mass.

Maiden Name of Wife: Elizabeth Copley Crowninshield

Died February 9, 1911

George Lee Peabody, son of Samuel Endicott Peabody and Marianne Cabot (Lee) Peabody, was born in Salem, Mass., May 16, 1865, and died at Baltimore, after a surgical operation, on February 9, 1911. He graduated at Harvard with the class of '86. While in college he was a member of the Pudding and the Porcellian.

After graduation he entered the office of Lee, Higginson & Co., bankers, 44 State St., Boston, became a member of the firm, and only retired on account of fatal illness on January 1, 1911. At one time he had charge of their London office. He married, June 1, 1891, Elizabeth Copley Crowninshield, daughter of Caspar Crowninshield of Boston. He was divorced from her in 1907, and in 1910 became engaged to Miss Edith Deacon. He was a member of the Somerset, University, Tennis and Racquet, and other clubs. In 1888 he was in the Salem Common Council.

Records of the Class

The recollections of any man's early childhood must necessarily be blurred; but, for all that, my memories of Peabody run back for nearly forty years. I cannot remember the time when he was not a part of my life.

I can see him now, a little white-haired boy, clean of body and clean of soul. I can see him year after year till he reaches full manhood with his cleanliness unsmirched. I can see him at the age of forty-five, and still he is spotless and without reproach.

Peabody was but a little lad when his father left this country to enter a London banking house. For several years thereafter he attended a school at Sevenoaks in England. I think it must have been a very good school, if we judge it by its fruits. At all events, Peabody came back to this country endowed with the truthfulness and manliness of some transcendent Tom Brown at some ideal Rugby.

In 1882 he entered Harvard with the rest of us and for four years led the life which we most of us led:—a fair amount of work, a fair amount of play, a little foolishness, and no vice. Like the rest of us, his most valuable acquisition at Harvard was the knowledge of how to be a man. In one respect only was his course exceptional:—I never knew him to stretch his conscience or even to give himself the benefit of the doubt in petitioning to be excused for absence from recitations or from chapel. A small matter, perhaps; but suggestive, I think, of that spotlessness of which I spoke.

At the time of our graduation I doubt whether I should have predicted unusual success in life for Peabody. Certainly I should not have predicted unusual success in finance. Young men and old men too, for that matter, are perhaps too ready to believe that financial success comes only to him who strains neither at gnats nor at camels, but complacently digests his daily peck of dirt. If that is the rule, I cite the exception. Gnat and camel alike were eschewed, and yet our classmate made a great mark in affairs.

When the column is broken ere it reaches completion no man can say what perfection the architect might have developed.

Harvard, Class of 1886

Yet an unfinished column whose marble is pure, whose lines are true and strong, whose ornament has symmetry and grace, even if we mourn its incompleteness, inspires us with its splendor and delights us with its beauty. So, while we cannot fathom the supreme architect's designs nor guess his purpose in cutting short this mortal's life, still we thank him that he has vouchsafed us this example and granted us the solemn privilege of loving sorrow.

A. P. G.

The Class of Harvard '86 assembled on March 4, 1911.

Resolved, That the death of George Lee Peabody has removed one of the most gentle, loyal, and loved members of the class.

Resolved, That his recent most efficient work in a class committee is affectionately remembered by the class.

Resolved, That the class extends to his family sincere sympathy in their affliction.

Resolved, That the secretary transmit a copy of these resolutions to the family.

'95-'96, engaged in gold mining in Central City, Colo.

Since '96, has been in the lumber and coal business in Haverhill, Mass.

Public, corporate, or club offices: trustee Haverhill Public Library; director Essex Book & Print Club.

Clubs or Societies since graduation: Pentucket and Island clubs, Haverhill; Country Club of North Andover; University Club of Boston; and a lot of others too numerous to mention, mostly charitable or literary.

'11, wrote: "As for writing to the Class to give an account of the last fifteen years, that is so easy that it is really humiliating. Because the last report covers the story; I have lived in the same town in the same way, doing business at the old stand, so to speak. In the course of years the business has increased somewhat, also the waist measure. I tried golf for the latter, but could n't see much improvement in the belt line, and none whatever in the game, so I practically gave that up and took to running an automobile for exercise.

"The death of my father in 1905 threw a lot of varied activities on my hands, and since then I have occupied myself about as much with them as with the Lumber business.

"Altogether they keep me pretty much occupied, and also, unfortunately, do not allow me to get away as much as I would like; but this country (Essex County) is so attractive both summer and winter that that objection is really academic, after all.

"I might add perhaps that my position of trustee of our Public Library (a very fine one) gives me an opportunity for a lot of very interesting and congenial work, so, on the whole, I rub along from one year to the next without paying undue attention to the flight of time until some event like the marriage of some friend's daughter, or a twenty-fifth anniversary makes me sit up and take notice; and then I realize that the years are passing and my accomplishment small, and, as I said at the beginning of the letter, it's humiliating."

"What little time the public leaves me is largely used in trying to steer five rather husky young Americans on the straight path for Harvard (including Radcliffe), with what success only the future can tell.

and enjoyable than I had any reason to expect it would be when I wandered from Cambridge twenty-five years ago; and while I have had to work, I have been able to take some very instructive and enjoyable vacations, and thus have seen more of the world than seemed probable when I graduated.

"In fact, if, at our fiftieth anniversary I can feel as satisfied with my battle with fate, I am sure that I shall feel that life has more than paid, and that it is a mighty good thing to have lived.

"I am looking forward with a great deal of pleasure to our Twenty-fifth Anniversary in June, and I am sure, from a recently received announcement of the plans, that it will compare most favorably with the Twenty-fifth Celebration of other classes."

show any pique or conceit, yet I consider that I am the real 'who is who' of our class.

"The reported 'made good' divide their honors with others as noted as they, but I stand alone at the top of the ladder, supreme of my kind. I am head, shoulders, body and feet above all the rest. I hold all positions of honor that can be held by one of my peculiar qualifications. My word is final, my dictum supreme. I lead my state in my chosen profession. I am a true 'it.' Does this not qualify me? Am I not the made-goodest thing on the pike?

"By the way, I forgot to state that I am the only dermatologist in the state and the only one north of Boston.

"Money — I guess yes. I can draw my check for almost any amount, and before I ran an automobile some trusting bill brokers would have discounted the small ones.

"In these days of political turmoil it is good to register one's convictions. I am a true republican-democrat with strong prohibition leanings — for the other fellow. Still I am not sot — and open to conviction if the other fellow has the price.

"I am still at the old stand, where I have been nearly fifty years, and classmates are always welcome, and any policeman can direct the shortest route.

"With the rest of the class I am growing aged, as my picture shows; but the worst is not there. My circumference increases as the square of my age. By the way, that and the tariff on woolen goods may have something to do with my political complexion. Still I hope to be able to waddle around next June and see all the boys once more."

"As to my life, I suppose that I may be classed as one of those who go to make up the general average. There is not the slightest danger that my name will ever appear in 'Who's Who.' I trust that it is equally sure that it will never appear in the list of 'Who's Where.'

"I am still manager of the Pittsburg office of Cluett, Peabody & Company. I believe that I am safe in saying that the Company feels that the office has been successfully managed.

"I live in a small town, and believe that I fulfill my duties

"I have not accumulated a fortune, but still feel that there is no possibility of myself or my family becoming a charge upon the community.

Thomas Walter Reynolds, the son of Thomas and Olivia (Watson) Reynolds, was born in Brooklyn, N. Y., January 19, 1859. He was fitted for college at the Polytechnic in Brooklyn and had traveled a good deal abroad before entering college with the class of '86, so that he was somewhat older than the average of his class. His studies in college were chiefly in language. He had a rather rare gift for sociability, and was known for a quaint and quizzical speech, and a ready and overflowing kindness for his associates which won him warm liking, in college and throughout his subsequent life. In his senior year he was a member of the Signet.

After graduation he planned to do journalistic work, but soon went abroad, married in 1889 in Switzerland, and during the rest of his life lived in Switzerland, France, and Italy.

His tastes were simple and domestic; he read a little, walked a good deal, speculated more or less on philosophical problems, and enjoyed life. In Switzerland he made his home chiefly in Kandersteg, a small village on the Gemmi Pass. On his way from that place to Italy with his family in May, 1905, he caught a severe cold which ran a rapid course and terminated fatally in June. He was buried at Montreux. A widow and four children survive him.

HENRY AUGUSTUS RICHARDS

Born February 28, 1865, at Weymouth, Mass.

Father's Name: Augustus Jacob Richards

Mother's Maiden Name: Mary Turville Clapp

Business: Coal and Grain

Marriage: Date, April 26, 1893. Place, East Weymouth, Mass.

Maiden Name of Wife: Lydia Charlotte Lovell

Died October 8, 1895

Henry Augustus Richards was born in Weymouth, Mass., February 28, 1865, and died there of typhoid fever October 8, 1895. He was educated at the Weymouth public schools and at Adams Academy, Quincy. After graduation he entered into active business life, relieving his father of much of the responsibility of their coal and grain business. He was a member of the First Corps Cadets, M. V. M., the Orphan's Hope Lodge, F. & A. M., the Pentalpha Royal Arch Chapter, and the South Shore Commandery. He was also a director of the Union National Bank and of the Weymouth and Braintree Publishing Company. He served the town upon several important committees and for a number of years was a member of the Republican Town Committee.

"When our secretary asked me a few days ago if I would not write something about H. A. Richards for the class report, it brought back again very vividly the shock I had felt on reading his name among those who had died.

"I did know 'Richie,' as we always called him, very well; and, although I had not seen much of him since 1886, owing to the separation of distance, I knew that he was happily married, was carrying on a successful business in his native town, where he was besides occupying places of honor and trust in the local government. He was doing, in fact, precisely what those who knew him best had expected of him. I had in thinking of him that satisfying sense common to most of us of feeling that one's friends are well, happy, and successful. The news of his untimely death came to me as a keen shock of personal loss, as it must have come to others of his classmates.

"Most of us, I imagine, are beginning to feel ourselves so far removed from our college days that we see Harvard through the blue haze of the memory, — Harvard as it was when we were there, the yard peopled with all the old familiar forms and faces; our old college rooms filled with the laughing, happy faces of our friends. It is thus I always see Richards. Poor 'Richie!' so true to his friends, so intensely patriotic in his love of '86 and old Harvard; feelings that he chose to conceal under a pessimistic expression of opinion, which deceived none of those who really knew him and his sterling qualities.

"Why he should be taken away when he was fulfilling the promise of his youth is part of that inscrutable mystery which we, mercifully, cannot solve until our own time comes.

"Death has been busy in our midst during these twelve years, and very many of us have to mourn empty places in our circle of college friends. We have lost another comrade, many of us another friend, but we have left us the satisfaction of knowing that to the last he played his part manfully and well. May he rest in peace."

November 30, 1910, Hon. Whitelaw Reid, U. S. Ambassador to Great Britain, accepted for T. W. Richards the Davy Gold Medal awarded by the Royal Society in recognition of his researches in the determination of atomic work.

'11, wrote: "I have tried to cut my publications down to the lowest terms, so as to avoid padding. The titles of my altogether too numerous papers would not interest the class, and would waste good paper and printer's ink. Indeed, I fear that none of the details of the simple life of the student of recondite chemical things can be dressed up into a thrilling guise.

"It is a source of great regret that I shall not be able to be present at Commencement. Last spring I promised to go to England this winter on a scientific errand; but the present short-handed state of the Division of Chemistry forced a postponement of the trip, and June is the only available time. Please give my best regards to my classmates, and tell them that I wish fate had permitted me to know them better."

Later, wrote: "I am very sorry indeed, as I said before, that I must be away. I had hoped to do something to entertain the class.

"I ought to have added that one important reason for my going to England is the fact that I must go to get a degree, awarded me by the University of Manchester. This was to have been given last June, but I had already promised then to be in Cambridge to get my degree here at that time, so it was impossible to go. This, added to the postponed Faraday Lecture, which must come in June because it could not come this month, makes it absolutely essential for me to go to England."

Father's Name: Stephen Francis Richardson

Mother's Maiden Name: Ellen Dow

Marriage: Date, February 28, 1889. Place, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Maiden Name of Wife: Elizabeth Walpole Gedney

Died August 24, 1895

Sumner Dow Richardson, son of Stephen F. and Ellen Dow Richardson, was born in Brooklyn, E. D., December 15, 1864, and died of mesenteric tuberculosis at Lenoir, Caldwell County, N. C., August 24, 1895. He prepared for college in the High School at Portland, Me., was admitted to the class of '86, and completed his course, regularly taking his degree. Although not widely known, he was widely respected, and had the sincere affection of all who were fortunate enough to enjoy his intimate acquaintance. During his course he was a valued member of the Signet and O. K. Societies, and of the Lampoon Board. Upon graduation he began work as a reporter for the New York Sun, with which paper he remained a short time; he then took a position on the New York Times, where his sterling qualities and unquestioned abilities speedily made for him an honorable place. September 8, 1891, he accepted the position of assistant night city editor offered him by the New York Herald, with which paper he was associated until July, 1893, when he left work on account of illness, and went first to Virginia and later to Florida and North Carolina. February 28, 1889, he was married in Brooklyn, to Elizabeth Walpole Gedney.

"As one to whom his friendship was very dear for more than twenty years, and to whom his memory will be dear while memory lives for me, I write these few words for his friends in our class. His face is before me now as I knew it in the old days: clear-eyed, alert, with a manly gravity that we all knew so well in the after years, and with the merry flashes that illumined all. If ever there was one who bound together the mature wisdom of the man with the wayward enthusiasm of the child, it was he. Swift of foot, strong of arm, and so a leader in the play, he was no less a counsellor, and in the charmed hours when we lay beneath the trees and talked as boys do of the world and the life before us, his was the wiser prophecy. To the pipings of our boyish fancies the sturdier purpose that was in him sounded a true diapason.

"His Sovereign was Truth, and honest manly endeavor was the tribute he paid; through all his life he did the best he could. None knew better than he the pleasures of ease, and none could have drawn from them a keener or a nobler delight; but though he knew and loved the kindly Phæacians, he kept his swift ship headed for the purple seas. And in the last sad days there were deeds to be done, which the strength of his spirit faced after the strength of his arm had failed.

"He pursued the course of his life as a philosopher, and met the obstacles that it presented with a sturdy determination, but smilingly withal, and hopefully always. Of innate refinement and courtesy, of wide reading and information, and of a disposition most happily adaptable to the temperament and taste of those with whom he associated, he was an honor to the name of gentleman, a name which he bore in the thought of all who knew him.

"True as steel, unselfish to a fault, earnestly solicitous for the welfare of those near him, entering heartily into their joys, and with a manly consolation and sympathy for their sorrows, he will be remembered by many of us as one of the most dear of the old friends who made up for us the ever-dearer circle of college friendship."

'11, wrote: " Since the close of 1905 my pilgrimage has been marked by the following changes and developments.

" In business: The firm of Roberts & Mitchell was dissolved late in 1906, amicably of course; my partner Robert Cushman and I forming a firm, Roberts, Roberts & Cushman, with my father and uncle, George L. and Reuben L. Roberts, with offices at 95 Milk St., Boston, which to us is the 'old stand,' as my father and his two brothers (one, John L. S. Roberts deceased several years ago) were the first tenants in this building, in 1877, and have occupied the same offices, to which our new ones adjoin, continuously since then. My father and uncle, despite their respective seventy-four and sixty-four years, are just as lively, hearty, and active as I am.

" Practice has been good, steadily increasing to more and better, so that we are making a living and having a good time doing it. I realize, with gratitude to the Fates, wherever they are, that I have been fortunate in the choice and pursuit of a profession which suits my capacities, temperament, and mental inclinations. questions of general legal character, and does not allow its practitioner to fall into the narrow grooves usually attributed to a specialty. The subject-matter is virtually unlimited in variety, has the virtue of always including things intrinsically attractive, and usually involves association with interesting people.

"In family: Again I burn the incense of gratitude. My wife and children give me happiness; daily association with my father, in relations so completely sympathetic that the filial and paternal merge into the friendly, so colors daily business life as to rob even routine of dullness. In June, 1907, the first daughter in our family for two generations was born into a world of amazement and adoration, both sedulously dissimulated by her parents for fear of damaging her infant character. Her nearest brother, born in 1905, unconsciously lends valuable assistance in this direction since he has no illusions as yet in respect to lovely woman, and insists on strict justice in the fraternal relations, except when mercy and leniency may be swayed to his own interest.

"In May, 1909, my mother died. I cannot render adequate tribute to her, nor should I attempt it here. Not a few of our classmates will remember her affectionately; during our four college years her house was open, literally at all hours, to my friends, who plundered her larder at midnight and were rewarded by her smile of welcome at breakfast.

"In 1908 I moved my household from Dedham to Chestnut Hill, with regrets on the one hand and distinct advantages on the other; our present home is near my father's and also to my brother-in-law, Fred S. Mead, '87, with whom I enjoy relations of annually increasing intimacy.

"In miscellaneous matters: In the early part of 1908 I had the good fortune to be instrumental in founding the Harvard Club of Boston. The circumstances were peculiar, and I think deserve recording. You were unable to attend the annual dinner of the Class Secretaries that winter, and I was delegated in your place. At the dinner a committee, appointed the previous year to investigate and report on the feasibility of having a Harvard Club in Boston, reported that, after diligent inquiry, they were of opinion that a Harvard Club in Boston was in no aspect necessary, desirable, or feasible. Nevertheless some of us differed in opinion. Garceau and Hayes, secretaries respectively of '91 and '96, and therefore with me members of the indissoluble brotherhood of the Cup, Key, and Link, were at the dinner, and we three discoursed on the train to Dedham that night; concluding that the only way to form a Harvard Club in Boston was to form it, and stop talking about forming it. Invitations were sent to about thirty men to dine at the University Club, and thereupon form the Harvard Club of Boston; they came, and enthusiasm did the rest. All Harvard men in Boston were invited, not urged, to join; the founders taking the position that they resolved to have a good time together, even if the membership were confined to the original thirty.

"In May, 1908, the Boston Club sent the largest delegation to the Philadelphia Convention, in 1908-09 had three big dinners, a smoker for the faculty and the 'grinds,' and manifested its existence in sundry other ways. The Club has founded five scholarships, has a membership of about fifteen hundred, which includes many members of the University Faculties, and more than justifies its existence. The ground was prepared for this growth when, in 1901, '86 visited '91 on Misery Island; the junction of '96 with the other two classes in 1906 had its effect. The habit of association was thus formed, and it was inevitable that representatives of these classes should take the initiative toward further organization of Harvard men.

"Collaterally to my professional work, I have very gladly responded to invitations from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and the School of Applied Science at Harvard, to give lectures on patents for inventions. The overseers have put me on the visiting committee to the School of Applied Science, so that I have not wholly lost communication with the academic world.

"Such meditation as I have given to ultimate problems has convinced me of the futility of speculation thereon; one uncertainly cannot be resolved in terms of another, and the theological attempts to find or formulate constants with which to reckon confidently, break down under dispassionate analysis. Whenever I have imagined an imminent solution, it has proved to be an emotional figment. So I am without a theology, but have a religion, which I believe to be unadulterated, for the reason that while it is unquestionably valid to me, it is not susceptible of definition in the language of communication. Theology can be discussed, since it rests in formula; religion baffles discussion since formula is banished from it. The theologian, be he any variety of Christian, Mahometan, Buddhist, Parsee, Mormon, Christian Scientist, or Voodoo, would at once commiserate me as a man without light or guide, without spur or sanction for conduct, or, in the usual eschatological terminology, a lost soul.

"But I don't think so, naturally. Speculations on the ultimate have invariably led nowhere; they are like attempts to comprehend infinity of space,—there is always a further ultimate, and the result is vexation of spirit. Between the docile unquestioning acceptance of apostolic authority and unadulterated free-thought there is no logical middle ground. The former alternative is impossible to one of my habit and inheritance; in the pursuit of the latter I have found that the attainment of free thought, thought that is scrupulously honest to itself, is an object superlatively difficult. Attainment of Nirvana is simple in contrast. I approximate to free-thought as a result of endeavor; I doubt if I can ever attain it in completeness.

"But in the results, such as they are, I find contentment. Eliminating the future state from calculation (not, be it understood, from possibility) I have eliminated all the probationary sanctions and duties which theology imposes, so that my conduct, such as it is, is shaped with reference to consequences, 'rewards and punishments,' here, amid the phenomenal, and not with reference to some future condition which imagination postulates. To do well by my race, by cherishing wife and rearing children, to serve my fellowman when I may, to earn his love by giving mine, to shape my acts so that, as far as I can forecast, they shall not result in harm to anyone, but shall, on the contrary, ameliorate conditions; these are objects of conduct quite sufficient to engross all my thought and command all my action. Concentration on the affairs of this world which alone we know can best be achieved by ignoring imaginary affairs in an imagined world of which we know nothing.

"And the phenomenal is so huge and far ramifying that it presents immeasurably greater opportunities for thought and work than the ultra-phenomenal, which is constricted always to the introspective working of an imagination. He who would save his life shall lose it. Historically treated, the facts show that humanity has been benefited most by the men who have unselfishly devoted their energies to the facts and phenomena of the perceivable world. Perhaps you may derive from this rambling letter some idea of what my religion is."

Henry Edward Salisbury was born in New York, November 5, 1864, and entered Harvard with the class of '86. While in college he roomed with H. L. Cammann, '86, and was a member of the Bicycle Club and the St. Paul's Society. On graduation he spent a half year studying law at Columbia and in the office of E. Ellery Anderson of New York, and then was called upon to act as executor of his father's estate. In the second half of '87 he went to California by the Panama route, returned after some months and was married in April, 1888, to Miss Mary Josephine Wood of New York. After a summer abroad he returned and entered on a business career in connection with the Whiting Manufacturing Company of New York. This continued his occupation until 1892, and during this time he was a member of the Larchmont Yacht Club and the Harvard Club of New York. Beginning with '92, however, his health failed and he was abroad almost continuously, living in Nice in the winter and in the Alpine heights in the summer. In Nice he was president of the Lawn Tennis Club. Cheered by the constant companionship of his wife and son and daughter, he lived a quiet life given entirely to the struggle against his tubercular infection. Shortly before his death he wrote: "The life of an invalid provides little of which to write, but occasional meetings with old friends of '86 have been among the pleasantest breaks in the quietness." He died at Davos, Switzerland, July 14, 1902.

Studious tastes and poetic sensibility were born and bred in Sanborn; no doubt the peculiar influences of Concord helped to develop that literary gift for which he was distinguished in the class. Already, while at college, he looked forward to journalism as his future profession, and gave his attention chiefly to history and political economy, although his tastes might have led him rather to the classics and to "belles lettres." He was active in college literature, and became an editor of the Advocate, one of the founders of the Monthly, and president of the Lampoon. He was class odist, and was selected to read poems on many other social occasions. The grace and humor of his verse are familiar to the class; what is perhaps not so generally known is that he wrote not only comic verse, but poems which, without being less graceful, are full of delicate feeling and genuine love of nature. It is to be hoped that these poems will some day be given to the public.

After graduating, Sanborn went on the staff of the Springfield Republican, and soon became literary and dramatic sub-editor. He also wrote for Puck and Life. In the spring of 1888 his health, never very good, became impaired. He remained in Springfield until the autumn, when he grew worse and returned to Concord. He continued to write for the Republican every week, and also helped his father in the preparation of several volumes. His health somewhat improved; but he began to suffer from melancholia, and his mind became subject to delusions before the last crisis came. He died on the 2d of March, 1889.

Died December 10, 1894

Adolph Thurnauer Scholle, son of William and Rosa Thurnauer Scholle, was born in San Francisco, June 11, 1865. His early education was obtained in the schools of that place. After graduation he spent three years in the Columbia Law School, and then went into business in New York with the banking firm of which his father was the head. He was a member of the New York Athletic, Grolier, Republican and Manhattan clubs of New York, and the Union League of Philadelphia. March 25, 1890, he was married in New York to his cousin, Pauline Edith Scholle, and March 31, 1891, a daughter, Gertrude Edith, was born. In 1892 his health began to fail, and though he sought strength in the Adirondacks and elsewhere, he died of pulmonary tuberculosis December 10, 1894. Scholle's tastes were all quiet. Of old books, fine bindings, and of paintings, he was something of a connoisseur, and in this knowledge he had profited by considerable travel in Europe. His chief care outside of the banking business consisted in the oversight of several charitable societies, in the work of which he took a deep interest. His habits were domestic; he made a happy home.

"Two years ago Marshall Cutler, '77, and Altrocchi, '08, loyally and ambitiously undertook to organize the 'Harvard Club of Italy,' with headquarters in Florence. The few Harvard men there are in Italy responded and an inaugural dinner was held May 1, 1909.

"Cutler provided the Club with a beautifully furnished room of old Flemish design on the Via Tornabuoni, which it was fondly hoped would afford an attractive meeting place for any Harvard men who might be passing through; but unfortunately visitors are few, and with the exception of two or three small dinners we have n't been able to do much. We are not content alone with a parish church which we have built, but have scattered our services in mission churches about the city, and are trying to brighten the conditions of the lives of the people of this section. We have also entered as largely as possible into the general church work of Minnesota, stimulating that work as far as we can by personal effort and financial aid.

"As a member of the General Board of Missions of this church I go on to New York repeatedly to transact the large and important business which is committed to the whole church.

ing the lonely ranches and little scattered hamlets, trying to bring the gospel to people who are without it. Along with the effort to be helpful, we had our fun as there is much to shoot and the streams have the best trout in them that I have ever seen. Each year I hope to be able to give a portion of my vacation to some such work for my own sake as well as for the good that may be accomplished.

"It is needless to say that I look forward to meeting all the men of our class next June. We are deeply interested in all Harvard matters out here, and the Associated Harvard Clubs are to have their meeting next May or early June in the Twin Cities, and we are going to work to give them the very best time we can, and make it a great and successful meeting.

"Our Harvard Club meets from time to time, and when we get together I forget the twenty-five years that have passed, and feel like a kid with those who graduated last year."

"When I was in college, one of the professors who belonged to a class that was about to celebrate its twenty-fifth anniversary told me that his contribution to the first class report filled several pages, while that to the report of the twenty-fifth anniversary could scarcely be made extensive enough to fill a few lines. His statement was incredible, as he had become a very distinguished man. But I realize now how little of importance there is to say after twenty-five years of study and teaching.

"Duties as professor and dean have occupied my time largely since 1906. I have carried on some original research, and have published the results in scientific periodicals. But the five years have passed without incidents worthy of particular notice. The university faculty with which I am associated has prospered in a high degree. There are several Harvard men in that faculty.

"I represented the Catholic University of America and the Harvard Club of Washington, D. C., at the inauguration of President Lowell. At a meeting of the Harvard Club of New Hampshire, at Rye Beach, last summer, I had the pleasure of renewing acquaintanceship with Walter Simmons. I have taken particular interest in the establishment of a scholarship by the Harvard Club of Washington, D. C., and in the selection of the young men to send to Harvard, as well as in a systematic effort to direct the attention towards Harvard of the young men who graduate from the Washington High Schools.

"It is seldom that I meet '86 men. I have met Coggeshall more frequently than any of the others. I note eagerly any mention of '86 by persons or by publications. The editorials of Washington papers give Congressman Gardner high praise this morning. Merited!

"Recently I gathered up tenderly all the printed matters concerning the class of '86 which I had saved, beginning in 1882. I had them bound securely in crimson morocco, including items down into June, 1907. There were forty-three pieces, which surely is only a part of the printed things issued concerning or by the class. The volume is as stately as is Webster's Unabridged Dictionary, and as large, but more interesting. I cherish an affection for it that will grow with the years. I have had it lettered: 'First twenty-five years of the Harvard Class of 1886.' Was that correct?

It may be interesting, however, to record the following, which I think may have been given you before in a somewhat different form! if so, I should like very much to have it changed to go on record as follows:

"Practically the whole of what is now known as 'Soldiers' Field' belonged for a great many years to my grandfather, the late Emery Willard, the original homestead on the land having been built in 1800, and it was my home after the death of my father in 1871 until the property was sold in 1890 to Major Henry L. Higginson, who then gave it to Harvard as a 'memorial to some dear friends who gave their lives and all that they had hoped for to their country and to their fellowmen in the hour of great need — the War of the Rebellion.'

"It is needless to say that I take the keenest interest in everything that pertains to the welfare and betterment of Soldiers' Field, the scene of my boyhood and college days, and all the happenings thereon have a different and deeper interest for me than for any other graduate.

Joseph Edward Sinnott, eldest son of Joseph Francis and Annie E. Rogers Sinnott, was born at Boston, Mass., on April 13, 1864. When about a year old his parents returned to Philadelphia, and he attended Professor Roth's Academy until he was fifteen, when he went to a Jesuit College at Tullamore, Ireland. On his return he was prepared for Harvard by Henry Hobart Brown and Professor Chase, and entered at the age of eighteen. After four years he graduated with his class in 1886. He was a member of the Art Club and of the Hasty Pudding Club. During four trips abroad he saw much of Europe, and during his stay at college in Ireland he spent his vacations on the Continent with his tutor. After graduating he entered the law office of Hon. Wayne MacVeagh, but as the legal profession was not to his taste, he abandoned it after a year's trial and became a journalist. After four years in the editorial department of the Philadelphia Times, he became assistant city editor, and this position he held until May, 1891, when his health gave out from the constant night work and a severe attack of la grippe. After some months he obtained a position in the Reading Railroad, which he occupied at the time of his death, July 21, 1892. In June he revisited his Alma Mater and remained during commencement week. He was taken ill while at the Maine lakes and returned home to die a week later from a tumor on the brain. He was unmarried.

Member of St. Botolph and Union Clubs of Boston, and Royal Geographical Society of London.

'11, wrote: "After graduating I began my four years' course in the Harvard Medical School in the fall of 1886, and followed the medical school with a most interesting service as house officer in the Massachusetts General Hospital.

"I shall never forget what I gained from the vast experience and kindly advice of the surgeons under whom I served, — Dr. John Homans, Dr. C. B. Porter, Dr. A. T. Cabot. The enjoyment of such a service cannot be described, and the day I left is one of the saddest of a lifetime.

"Then came a year in Vienna, the best medical centre of the world at the time. Billroth was still operating and Kraus — now head of Berlin — one of our teachers. Plenty of medicine, plenty of opera, plenty of beer, and many a good climbing trip into the Steiermark, Tyrolese, and Swiss mountains with my lifelong doctor friends, — Chas. L. Gibson, W. E. Faulkner, J. B. Blake, Louis A. di Zerega, and Charles Hoover.

"A short trip in the Orient, Greece, Asia Minor, and Turkey, with wild boar shooting in the Albanian hills made a pleasant vacation at Christmas time.

"In the summer I broke away from medicine, for a time, after my first year. I had seen all the big countries of Europe and northern Africa. I wanted something wilder, something dangerous. I wanted to hunt big game. So in the fall of 1892, after a summer and fall in northern Norway, where we fished for salmon and shot elk, Dr. A. Donaldson Smith and I made an expedition into Somaliland, Africa.

"Those were wonderful months in our new experience of desert and jungle; full of excitement, fear, and respect for our courageous followers. We bagged lion, elephant, rhino, wild boar, and many kinds of antelope.

"More medicine in Vienna, and finally back home again, where I practised in Worcester, Mass., two or three years.

"Then to Vienna and Berlin for special study in gastro intestinal work, in preparation for settling in Boston, where I practised several years after my return and varied the life by an expedition to Alaska after the giant Kadiak bear.

"But there were other places I had to visit in the East, and I left home one day with the idea of following the tiger through Asia, to shoot and study him. The two years away from home were full of interest, — the eastern countries with their old civilizations, the oriental people with their remarkable instincts, the tiger. I was lucky in my selection of this animal because of the fear and superstitions which surround him wherever he exists to-day, and in my pursuit I learned something of the curious workings in the minds of the natives who live in tiger lands.

"I followed the tiger's trail through Korea, China, Java, and Persia, and made a splendid trip through the East Indies as far south as New Guinea in addition. The pleasure of the journey through India was doubled by the companionship of Dr. John Muir, the well-known geologist. In Persia the ruins of Persepolis and the tombs of the kings made the long days of travel worth while, and I left friends behind me all along the line from the diplomatic legations in Teheran to the nomad Bakhtyari chiefs in the South and the charcoal burners along the Caspian Sea.

"In Ispahan I was called in by the Zill-es-Sultan (brother of the Shah) as medical consultant, and as doctor was admitted into several harems. The hospitality and friendliness of the white, yellow, and black peoples throughout the East will remain an oasis of pleasure in my mind through my whole life.

"Three years ago I passed a summer in the Tyrolese Dolomites, mountain climbing and chamois shooting. My special object was to photograph these jagged limestone peaks and the ascents of my guides in dangerous situations. Then, the following spring I was asked to join a shooting expedition into Sonora, Mexico, as medical adviser. We had rare sport hunting cougars, and I had a good opportunity of studying another member of the cat family.

"Close on the heels of the Mexican trip came an expedition into British East Africa with Dr. Glover Allen and Mr. Gorham Brooks. Our main idea was to make a zoölogical collection for the Agassiz Museum. Luck came our way in this country of wonderful mammals, and we brought back the skins and skeletons of thirty different varieties of big game (lion, elephant, rhino, buffalo, leopard, hyena, wild dog, etc., etc.), besides hundreds of specimens of small mammals and birds.

"The lions and elephants lived up to their reputation, and we had several close brushes with the latter animals.

"As I write I see four elephants rushing madly by me, a few feet away, their trunks raised high, screaming with rage.

"What has it all amounted to? Friends all over the world and a storehouse of knowledge taken at first hand to work with. (The hunting trophies are only checks on the trunk.)

"I was over-sensitive in college, and did not feel at home with my own kind.

"My trips brought me in close contact with animals and primitive people. I came to know them, and increasing this knowledge as I came up the scale through animals and primitive people to the higher type, I came to know something of human nature at home.

"As I look back it was like passing through centuries of evolution in a lifetime.

"I tore down my medical shingle a few years ago because I found out medical practice was not my job, and have taken up writing and lecturing. I am particularly interested in studying the instincts of animals and comparing them with our own. I am forty-eight years old, feel twenty-five, unmarried, and enjoy life more than ever."

Clubs or Societies since graduation: Country and Harvard clubs.

At present engaged in farming.

'10, wrote: "It is very good of you to ask me to write a letter for the class, but as I suggested, I fear my life is too dull and uneventful from any but a farmer's point of view to interest them. Life on a farm is intensely interesting to one who loves the country and farming, but it is a more or less sealed book to those who do not, and as I remember the last class report there were hardly any farmers, strictly speaking, among the members of '86.

"Perhaps I am not myself a farmer, strictly speaking. I live in the country. To a certain extent I farm. That is all, and yet that is a great deal. Three years ago last May I bought a farm of seventy acres in Wayland.

"They say the tyro always has an ideal of a farm in mind. In that ideal is embodied an old colonial house on a hill with a view, a babbling brook, a pond, a grove of fine trees and good tillage. Before he has attained his desire he has usually compromised on one or more of these attributes.

"I compromised on the brook. It exists in spring, to be sure, but its life is ephemeral, and the pond it fills is constant all the year around on the map of Wayland alone.

"The house, however, was an old one, built in 1720, and, as you know in the case of old New England farm houses, it is under the hill and not on the top. So I make a second compromise by walking up the hill for the view instead of taking it from my windows.

"I 'did it over,' as they say, and in the process, dug out from behind layers of wall paper and cloth, several walls of old wood hand-made panellings. This was a delightful surprise, and the old ovens and cupboards as well.

Harvard, Class of 1886

"In the experience of becoming a farmer, I find my education broadening to the extent that I am in danger of becoming intelligent. One never realizes how crass is his ignorance in matters general until he strikes a farm. I have in succession become a carpenter, a plumber, a mason (without a lodge) a gardener, a builder of drains, an upholsterer, a coachman, a chemist. Being some distance from a source of supplies and isolated these attainments are often valuable, and yet isolation has its advantages. When one lives two miles from a lemon, he does not find many handed to him.

"I do not say that I am making money. The cost of my products often reminds me of the farmer who invited his guests to partake according to their tastes either of milk or champagne, adding drily that there need be no hesitation in their decision, as they cost equally the same.

"I am raising apples and hay but am inclined to think it should be apples and pigs — pigs is pigs and the most profitable cumulative three hundred percent stock I wot of.

"Altogether it is a very pleasant life. I would not care to return to the city unless I had a farm on Commonwealth Avenue. But I think the harking back to the farm movement a mistake for any save the rich man, for the difficulty of keeping servants is great, and one must keep an army, if he would keep any at all.

"With kind regards to the class."

That I have had my full share of work and good health to do it with sums up the past few years. Date of Birth,

October 25, 1896

Edmund Nathaniel Snyder was born March 25, 1863, at St. Louis, Mo., and died at Denver, Colo., of tuberculosis, October 1, 1896. When a small boy he was brought by his parents, Joseph and Christine Snyder, to Cleveland, where he thenceforward lived, except during the years he spent at Harvard and in Germany. He attended the grammar and high schools at Cleveland, and was, of course, valedictorian at graduation. At college he devoted himself especially to classical subjects, and graduated with highest honors in classics and at the head of his class. He immediately went to Germany on a Rogers Fellowship, studied there four years, and took his Ph.D. degree at Leipsic. In 1890 he returned to America and taught one year in Vassar College. During the year that followed, the University School of Cleveland was opened, and he was selected as professor of German and French. Miss Sarah M. Scovell, a Cleveland girl, was associated with him in this work, and on July 11, 1894, they were married. In March of 1896, on account of failure of health, it became necessary for him to secure a year's leave of absence. He stayed in Cleveland, however, until July, and then went alone to Denver; there for two or three months he gave evidence of considerable improvement, but toward the end of September he failed rapidly, and died suddenly, away from his family, on the 1st of October. Two weeks later a little daughter was born.

He was a member of the Delta Upsilon, the Iris Masonic Lodge, and the American Oriental Society. His most notable publication was "Der Commentar und die Textüberlieferung des Mahavamso," a translation of writings in the Pauli language from the original text in the British Museum.

Such is a brief account of the notable facts in Snyder's life. Meager indeed they are, and utterly fail to tell what a man he was. In the first place he was a born student, to whom persistent mental application was easy and habitual. Gifted with a marvelous memory, and with an omnivorous, insatiable appetite for learning, the career that he followed until his return from Germany seemed the natural and perhaps the inevitable one. His powers as a student are so well known that one may be excused for saying far less of them than they deserve, but he was a many-sided man, and other characteristics which many, perhaps most, of his classmates did not know, were his consideration for others, his cordiality, his good humor, and his enjoyment of outdoor life. With all his work, he kept himself in such excellent physical condition that he competed honorably in vaulting at more than one of the winter meetings. E. H. Babbit, who knew him well, says: "He never would hurt another's feelings in any way, and in spite of his almost uncanny quickness of attainment he was essentially modest. Some may not know, too, that he was a good deal of a ladies' man, a remarkably good dancer, a good talker, and a good listener on a thousand and one subjects that interest the fair sex, and so evidently a real man behind all his unobtrusiveness that he never failed to please." Though he knew his mental strength, he was too modest in its assertion, and his reputation as an educator and scholar is less in consequence. Most of us sighed to see him spending himself on the work he did after his return. Secondary education here profited, indeed, but what a loss to higher education!

"In June, 1907, I gave up teaching as I found this work to be wearing upon me to such a degree that hardly a year passed without a severe illness, and I found myself growing very irritable.

"Since then my summers have been passed in Maine and in Nova Scotia, and I have tried to do a little private tutoring at Exeter. Last winter I had grip, then tonsillitis, and in the spring whooping cough, which clung to me for a long time. It was all rather discouraging. Finally I decided to cut loose from all work of the nature of teaching, so I have come to Europe for rest and change. If it is possible I plan to remain in Europe about two years. I am glad to say that already I am feeling better.

"Mrs. Stone and I have been spending a month at Lussinpiccolo, on the Island of Lussin, in the Adriatic, about one hundred miles south of Triest. The mid-day meal we often ate in the garden, under palm trees, beside a rose bush in bloom, and had lemons from a tree in this garden. Yet this island lies about two hundred miles further north than New York. They call it the 'Austrian Riviera.' It is frequented by Hungarians.

Father's Name: William Way Taylor

Mother's Maiden Name: Ellen Blois Hayes

Business: Teaching and Writing

Degree: A.M., 1890

Died May 22, 1893

Percy Hayes Taylor was born in Baltimore August 28, 1857. He was of Quaker descent, and was a nephew of Bayard Taylor. His early education was received from tutors at his home. Before going to college he traveled a year in Europe, and on his return studied two years at Johns Hopkins. Here he devoted himself mainly to the study of languages, and showed a remarkable facility in their acquisition. This gift for language, a family inheritance, was demonstrated by his learning to read, write, and speak Chinese. He organized the first Chinese Sunday School in Baltimore, and translated selections from the Scriptures into that language. Leaving Johns Hopkins in 1884 he entered the junior class at Harvard, and there, while keeping up his special study, took courses in music and political economy. He was a member of the Conférence Française. After graduation he began teaching as a profession, and in the next few years wrote a number of articles on methods. He tutored and had schools in Cambridge and New Haven. In 1889-90 he was again a student at Harvard, and received the A.M. degree and the Shattuck Scholarship at the end of the college year. In 1891 he taught in a private school in New York and the following year held the chair of Greek and Latin at the Catholic College of St. Thomas Aquinas. In the spring of 1893 he became ill with typhoid fever and died of peritonitis May 22.

Frank Hamilton Underwood was born at Milford, Mass., April 6, 1863, and died of consumption, at Buffalo, N. Y., April 3, 1906. Entering Harvard with '86 he followed the life of a quiet, hard student and devoted much of his time to mathematics in which he took second-year and final honors. During the year after graduation he taught in a private school at Brickfield, Conn., and the following year returned to Harvard for a post-graduate course and took the A.M. degree in 1888. His subsequent life was devoted entirely to teaching in Buffalo. For about ten years he was connected with the Heathcote School, and then founded the Underwood School, which grew under his care until his death.

While a hard worker, he was interested in botany, whist, and chess in college days, and these interests he kept up to the end. In Buffalo he was a member of the Buffalo Chess and Checker Club and had considerable reputation there for success in meeting several opponents in simultaneous chess.

In November, 1892, he married Fanny Harriet Ball and had six children.

Hugh Campbell Ward, the son of Seth Edmund and Mary Frances (Harris) Ward, was born March 10, 1863, at Westport, Mo., and died August 15, 1909. He was a descendant of Seth Ward, President of Trinity College, Oxford. His boyhood was spent in Nebraska, but his preparatory school work was done in Kansas City, Mo. At seventeen years he entered William Jewell College and graduated with the class of '84. He then entered Harvard in the junior year of '86, and graduated with that class. The next two years were spent in the St. Louis Law School, from which he received the LL.B. degree in 1888. He immediately entered on the practice of law in Kansas City, Mo., and continued there till his death. His practice carried him into the Supreme Courts of Missouri and Kansas and the Supreme and Circuit Courts of the United States. In 1893 he served a term as member of the House in the Missouri Legislature, and in 1898 he was appointed Police Commissioner of Kansas City by the Governor of Missouri. He was receiver of the Masten estate, valued at $3,000,000, for five years, and trustee for three years of the assets of the Metropolitan National Bank of Kansas City. In his later years he became known as a corporation lawyer, serving as attorney for the Kansas City Home Telephone Company, Commerce Trust Company, Kansas City, Mexico, and Orient R. R., and other corporations. He was a member of social and professional clubs of Kansas City and president of the Kansas

'11, wrote: "My activities since the date of the last Class Report have been almost entirely political. In July, 1906, under the then new primary election law of Illinois I became a Republican candidate for the office of United States Senator along with Senator Shelby M. Cullom and former Governor Richard Yates, also Republicans. The announcement of my candidacy surprised all Illinois, and this surprise became a sensation from one end of the State to the other when the election returns on August 4, 1906, gave me the unexpected total of 12,592 votes. I had taken this method of introducing myself to the politics of the State, and in that respect my candidacy was eminently successful.

"Encouraged by the large vote I had received in 1906, I again became a candidate for the senatorship in the primaries of August 8, 1908, against Senator Albert J. Hopkins, former Senator William E. Mason, and Congressman George Edmund Foss, H. '85. The unexpected appearance of Congressman Foss as a candidate, at the solicitation of the leading newspapers of Chicago, late in the campaign, disappointed my hopes of receiving a large vote. His candidacy probably cost me from 80,000 to 100,000 votes. Under these circumstances I was thankful to score a substantial increase over my vote of 1906. My total vote in 1908 was 14,704. On the same day I was an unsuccessful candidate for the Republican nomination for Congress from the seventh Chicago district, receiving 2447 votes. My campaign was interrupted and brought to a close by the sickness and death of my mother, which occurred at Washington, D. C., July 29, 1908. It was the first break in our family circle in more than forty years.

"In the primary election of September 15, 1910, I was again a candidate for the Republican nomination for Congress from the seventh district and received 4861 votes, the largest vote cast for any defeated Republican candidate for Congress in Chicago, and larger than that of any successful Democrat whose nomination was contested.

"None of the defeats recorded above has embittered me, except perhaps the last, to a certain extent. I made my campaign for Congress in 1910, on a strong Progressive Republican platform. My rival for the nomination, Congressman Frederick Lundin, was a pronounced 'stand-patter.' The Republican machine fought me in every ward. In their desire to save the County ticket the Progressive Republican newspapers had not a word to say in my behalf, although they did criticise my rival somewhat. Yet in spite of all this opposition I, single-handed, almost won the nomination. Had I received the newspaper support to which on my platform I was fairly entitled, I would have been nominated. I may add that my successful rival for the nomination went down to defeat on election day in this strongly Republican district.

"Twenty-five years after our graduation I may enumerate as perhaps my most important achievements the organizing of three law schools, two of which are still in a flourishing condition. While defeated in my political aspirations I have, nevertheless, in my several campaigns become widely known throughout Illinois — no mean asset in politics, and one which may sometime lead to my political preferment. Indeed, I believe that if I should again become a candidate for Congress two years hence, I would win both a nomination and an election, and thus achieve one of the three ambitions of my life.

"I have good health, for which I am thankful; and while I have achieved none of my life's ambitions, I do not despond. I move along with the procession with such moderate degree of enjoyment as comes to him who lives in the tranquillity of bachelor years."

Born December 7, 1864, at Boston, Mass.

Father's Name: Samuel Wells

Mother's Maiden Name: Catherine Boott Gannett

Business: Law

Died February 18, 1907

On December 7, 1864, at No. 10 Boylston Place, Boston, was born to Samuel Wells and Catherine Boott Gannett, his wife, a son, their first-born. The boy was christened, in honor of his maternal grandfather, Stiles Gannett Wells. He grew as boys grow; was fitted for college at the Boston Latin School and at the William Nichols private school; and entered Harvard in the class of '86. While in college he distinguished himself in athletics, winning the 440 yards at the intercollegiate meets of 1886, 1887, and 1888. After graduation he was for two years at the Harvard Law School, and then entered the law firm of Bangs and Wells, in which his father was a partner. Here he quickly came to hold an important place, the more that his father broke down in health, so that to a large extent the responsibility came upon his shoulders. After the death of his father in 1903, his work went on under circumstances peculiarly trying. The testimony which is borne by many of the ablest and most upright men in Boston to the integrity, the ability, and the courage with which Gannett Wells handled the business would in itself constitute a nobler epitaph than it is the good fortune of most men to deserve. He was twice abroad; first in 1899, and second in 1904. On the latter trip he was so-called "graduate advisor" of the Harvard men when the Harvard-Yale team went over to meet Oxford and Cambridge. The last years of his life were darkened by ill health and by business complications for which he was not responsible; and both he met with unflinching intrepidity and manliness. He made a gallant fight for life, and he handled the exacting and perplexing worries of business with unflinching courage and inflexible integrity. Not a little of the strength which he needed for his fight against disease he knowingly used for the protection of clients whose trust seemed to him to give them claims of greater weight than his own instinct to spare himself. He died of acute pneumonia, February 18, 1907.

As a clubman he was prominent as treasurer of the Copley Society and as a member of the Puritan, Tavern, Essex County, and County Clubs. He was interested in art and literature and was known as an art connoisseur.

A number of marked New England strains were united in his blood. Among the ancestors on the father's side were Governor Wells, of Maine, and the old Appleton stock. President Ezra Stiles, of Yale, was his maternal great-great-grandfather; while his maternal grandfather was the Rev. Ezra Stiles Gannett, one of the most distinguished Unitarian divines of his day. Dr. Gannett was Unitarian at a time when Unitarianism preserved much of the stern spirit of Puritanism; when, indeed, it was in a way more severe than early Puritanism, in that it demanded of man that by his own power he produce the miracle of personal perfection which in Calvinism is held to be possible only by the direct grace of God. Dr. Gannett, spiritual, sternly upright, almost unhumanly unselfish, was of the household in the days of Gannett's childhood, and his personal influence was added to the tendencies of heredity. A child whose very cradle has been rocked according to a law of conscience must bear the marks of such a Puritan influence through life. Moral indifference must be forever impossible; and perhaps equally impossible would be perfect freedom from self-consciousness.

The temper of the boy is illustrated by an incident which happened when he was eight. The poet Longfellow came to the house, and the lad was presented to him. "Mr. Longfellow," said Gannett, "I had to recite one of your poems at school yesterday, but I did not like it." The New England conscience is not unlikely to beget a feeling that honesty is to be fearlessly followed, even if the social conventions get somewhat damaged in the process.

With the New England heritage, with such a lineage and such traditions, with a childhood so influenced, the boy grew to youth, and through a youth softened by warm home love but surrounded by a moral atmosphere which to a child of modern times must have seemed somewhat cold, developed into the man we knew. He was of an uprightness so complete as to be practically instinctive; of an integrity so high and fine that it might almost seem to have been handed down from sterner days and times morally more heroic. With it went a self-tormenting doubt, as a shadow may lurk behind the noblest monument. No soul ever lived more loyal to his friends; but to himself he could be pitiless with the self-cruelty of an early ascetic plying the scourge upon his own shoulders. Sometimes a manner purposely made uncount was meant to conceal feeling, but no one could ever doubt the tenderness of his heart, as no one could possibly fail to feel his flawless honesty. Those who knew him best, loved him best; and we look back upon his life with the assurance that the implacable balance of Death's accounting richly justifies our respect and our friendship. The fact which in our remembrance of him stands out most strongly is that whatever limitations he shared with all humanity, Gannett Wells had in an unusual degree that fine and noble quality which is perhaps most fully expressed in the single high word — CHARACTER.

CHARLES ABBOT WILSON

Born November 15, 1865, at Washington, D. C.

Father's Name: Nathaniel Wilson

Mother's Maiden Name: Annie Edwards Hutton

Business: Law

Died August 28, 1888

Charles Abbot Wilson, the eldest son of Nathaniel and Annie Edwards (Hutton) Wilson was born in Washington, D. C., November 15, 1865.

He was prepared for college at Emerson Institute, Washington, D. C., by Professor Charles B. Young. Upon his graduation from the Institute in June, 1882, he had the valedictory and the medal for highest scholarship.

This excellent scholarship Wilson maintained while in College. He had great reserve powers which were called forth in his senior year. He had been ill during most of the junior year and was obliged to absent himself from college. All this lost time he made up in his senior year, and graduated, with credit, with his class.

He entered the Harvard Law School in the autumn of 1886, and remained there until June, 1887. From that time until

Harvard, Class of 1886

November, 1887, he was in the office of his father, Nathaniel Wilson, in Washington.

Early in November, 1887, he went abroad with friends and traveled through England, France, and Spain, and along the Mediterranean to Constantinople. He went thence to Venice and Rome, where he passed some time with his classmate Charles Lamb. He returned home in May, 1888. Intending to resume his studies at the Law School in October, he again entered his father's office where he continued at work until August, when he joined his family at York Harbor, Me. On his arrival there he was attacked by malarial fever, from which he seemed recovering, but died suddenly on the morning of August 29, 1888, from embolism.

Wilson was of a particularly happy disposition and was never known to be gloomy. He was popular among all his fellows at college, and he especially endeared himself to the members of his society, the Pi Eta. In his death his class had a great loss.

Died March 27, 1911

Charles Sumner Balcomb was born at Salem, November 8, 1862, and died at his home in Salem, March 27, 1911. In college he was preëminently a student and was elected to Phi Beta Kappa. He was obliged to defer graduation until 1887. After graduation he was in Kentucky and Tennessee until 1893, teaching for one year, working in a library for another, and then acting as draughtsman in the engineering and motive departments of the Southern Railway System. In 1894 he returned to Boston and became draughtsman in the civil engineering department of the Boston & Maine R. R. During the years 1895-97 he was working in the offices of Rice & Evans, civil and hydraulic engineers, Boston, but in 1898 he became connected with the Boston Elevated R. R., and served as draughtsman in various departments of this corporation until his death. On November 12, 1902, he was married to Annie Isabelle Wheeler,, and had one child.

In May, 1911, a friend wrote: "As you know he was a tireless student, and for this reason, also because he was somewhat retiring, he entered into very little of the social life of the college, not enough for his best good, perhaps. He was over-conscientious and apt to underrate his ability. It was a habit for us to say when looking up a subject, no matter what, 'ask Charlie, he'll know,' for the amount of information he had stored away was simply marvellous.

"His record in the Salem schools was an enviable one. He kept his place at the head of the class for years. I believe he continued this record for several years in Harvard until an illness due to a combination of sunstroke and overstudy obliged him to be satisfied with or at least to tolerate a lower mark. After the illness he did not seem to recover the same superb enthusiasm, and while his brain power did not seem impaired (he continued a student always, and brought to his hobbies, botany, astronomy, fruit culture, etc., the same intense study) that illness seemed to put a check upon achievement. Instead of the professional life for which he seemed so well endowed, he took up draughting, of which he had always been fond.

"He was a man of deep religious conviction, and possessed the old-time sterling virtues. He gave generously of his means to those in need and to missionary causes; in fact he was untiring in all Christian activities; he always seemed to be taking on a little more work of some sort, and never seemed to think there was a limit to human endurance. His wife and I have protested against his 'burning the candle at both ends,' yet we were blind in a great measure, and did not really awake to his danger until it was too late to stem the avalanche. When the break came it was a mighty one."

Died November 25, 1902

His early education was received in the Cambridge public schools. In college he was especially interested in football, playing quarterback on the University Eleven in his senior year. He took his A.B. degree in 1885. Until 1891 he studied architecture with Allen & Kenway, in the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, with Hartwell & Richardson in this country, and at the Ecole des Beaux Arts in Paris.

On his return he practised his profession in Boston. His health first broke down in 1891-'92, but during 1893-'95 he was assistant instructor in the Department of Architecture at Harvard. He was obliged to give up work in 1900 when he went South, and later to the Sanitarium at Liberty, N. Y., but during the year preceding his death he lived in Weston, Mass.

Records of the Class

In college he was an enthusiastic football player on his freshman eleven, and played quarterback on the University Eleven in his senior year. He was a member of the Shooting Club, Institute of 1770, and the Hasty Pudding Club. After graduation in 1885 he decided upon architecture as a profession, and for two years studied in offices in Boston and as a special student at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. In 1887 he went to Paris, and entered the Ecole des Beaux Arts. There, and at the Atelier Pascal, he worked for two years, stood very high, and received several medals and a first mention. His vacations were spent in travel and study. Upon his return in 1890 he became connected with the firm of Chamberlain & Whidden, but being obliged to assist his father in the care of his estate remained with them only a short time. In 1892 he bought a farm at Temple, N. H., where he and his family spent their summers after his marriage. This place became more than any other his home. The work of reclaiming and improving it was perhaps his greatest interest and keenest pleasure. His health first broke down during the winter of 1891-92, when he was obliged to go South for a milder climate. In June, 1893, he married Leslie L. Fisher of Boston. He lived in Jamaica Plain, and later in Boston. In 1893 he became assistant instructor under Mr. Langford Warren in the Department of Architecture at Harvard University. He held this position for two years. From 1895 to 1900, when he finally gave up work on account of his health, he was the architect of a number of houses in the vicinity of Boston, and of Brimmer Chambers in the city. His condition grew steadily worse, and in February, 1900, he went South again. In June of the same year, he went to the Loomis Sanitarium at Liberty, N. Y. In October, 1901, he rejoined his family in Weston, where he remained until his death, November 25, 1902.

Clubs or Societies since graduation: member of the St. Botolph, Union Boat, and Union clubs of Boston, the Boston Society of Architects, and the Society of Beaux Arts Architects of New York.

landed the supplies. The expedition was known as the second 'Florida' expedition, and was in command of Lieut. Carter Johnson of the 10th Cavalry. In December, 1908, I was in Rome, when the earthquake which destroyed Messina and Reggio, Calabria, took place. I with other Americans and Italians went to Messina to do what we could under the general direction of our ambassador, Mr. Lloyd Griscom. After about a fortnight in Messina I returned to Rome, and later went to Reggio, Calabria. Here I remained over six weeks, constructing houses and distributing a fund supplied by the American Red Cross through Ambassador Griscom. For this work I was awarded a silver medal by the American Red Cross and also made a Chevalier of the Crown of Italy. At present I am leading the ordinary life of the average American citizen, hoping for something to turn up before I get too old to take a hand."

Is practising law in Seattle, Wash.; has large mining interests in Alaska. Was formerly president of the Board of Regents of the University of Washington.

'10, wrote: "After two years in the academic course at Harvard University and at the Harvard Law School, removed to Eureka, Nevada, where I served as superintendent and principal of the Eureka High School, and began the practice of law. Was clerk of the Nevada State Senate in 1889, came to Seattle in spring of 1889, and have since practised law in this city. In the presidential campaign of 1896 my debates with prominent gold standard champions gave my name prominent mention as candidate for United States senator, but I refused to become a candidate. However, I accepted an appointment by two governors as a member of the Board of Regents of the University of Washington, and was elected by my associates as president of the Board. I have made mining law a specialty, and am attorney for many of the largest mining corporations in Alaska and Washington. My practice has given me the means for successful financial and business connections."

and during this time he also gave great attention to the study of gait in horses. For nine years he was in the fire insurance business.

Clubs or Societies since graduation: Society California Pioneers (junior member), Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals (trustee 1906-08).

'06, wrote: "The making of dry wines is practically my vocation and I hope to return to it in the near future. In this city (San Francisco) I have been engaged in the fire insurance line. Since, however, our awful conflagration of seven to eight square miles has devastated insurable localities, there will be little to do in that line of business until the city is rebuilt on those definite plans by which our citizens hope to make it a model city. That will probably take a couple of years. Meanwhile only one-story wooden buildings are allowed to be erected so as to keep up business. As to its ultimate destiny, this city is going to be finer in its appearance than before.

"Incidentally I may mention that my great hobby has been for years the investigation of the two gaits of our American breed of horses, namely the standard trotter and pacer. I am not a sportsman, but I do love a good horse beyond anything, and I pretend to be able to tell a good one. My investigation is to establish certain practical ends regarding shoeing. It is my intention to write a manual, and I believe I can, by my way of measuring the strides of a horse in motion and computing the various averages of the four foot-prints, establish the cause and effect of an imperfect gait. Should I do so, my work will redeem me from the obligation toward our Alma Mater to do something original."

'11, wrote: "When I look back thirty years to my resolve to attend Harvard—much to the displeasure of my parents—and think of the short year spent there, I feel glad that the effort was made; for I believe that the effect of such an advantage, however brief, benefits every man. Years afterwards we feel an obligation toward the persons and conditions that made it possible to enjoy such an advantage, and we think of these collectively as our Alma Mater. Her subtle influence seems to keep alive the desire for progress and enlightenment and to direct our thoughts and actions through all the trials of life. By means of this fancied obligation to our Alma Mater we should be able to rouse a failing courage and to retain a sober optimism. We may give this loyalty the name of idealism, or the endeavor of the mind for better and more perfect results, because it tends to eliminate much drudgery from whatever work we may be doing. In the strenuous pursuit of success it helps to keep our mental vision clear and to hold us to a higher standard of conduct.

“Like hounds on the leash we looked forward in those days to an active life with impatience, and the many iridescent dreams of youthful hope soon vanished like soap bubbles in a breeze. Perhaps none of our great expectations came to pass, but even after these twenty-five years of varied experiences it is to be hoped that most of us still have, by reason of this idealism, enough reserve force to try and reach out for fortune’s gifts denied before.

“‘The epochs in our life are not in the visible facts of our calling, our marriage, our acquisition of an office, and the like, but in the silent thought by the wayside as we walk; in a thought which revises our entire manner of life and says: “Thus hast thou done, but it were better thus.”’

“If we have been able through the storm and stress of life to preserve our health and can couple to such mental habits a robust and active body, there ought to be much happiness in store for even the least of us still at this period of our existence. Strong indeed is he among us who ‘fortune’s buffets and rewards hath ta’en with equal thanks’ and still progresses undismayed. Fortunate is he who is able to meet these more readily because of the companionship of a brave and honest woman. And a loyal son of Harvard is he who through all trials and temptations has the fortitude to become and to remain a practical idealist. It is the conceit among college graduates to become ‘leaders of men.’ It were better if they reckoned less on having ‘followers,’ because of the danger of such leaders becoming mere teachers of doctrines, whereas their mission is plainly to enlighten their fellowmen by causing them to think honestly for themselves."

'11, wrote: "I think the most important work I have ever done has been to develop the use of re-enforced concrete caissons in breakwater and lighthouse construction. I took out a patent on this process of construction about twelve years ago and gave it to the United States, taking this precaution to prevent someone else holding up the Government at a later day. I was never in a position to use the method, however, until some three or four years ago, on Lake Michigan. My paper on 'Concrete-Steel Caissons' is a rather complete record of the construction of our first breakwater of this description. They are using much larger caissons now at Milwaukee harbor, and contemplate another harbor at Racine on this same system. Several lighthouses have been built by the Government utilizing these caissons, and they are coming into very general and successful use.

"I have just noted this morning in an engineers' handbook by Mansfield Merriman, just issued, a page or two describing the caissons that I built, and making the statement, with reference to breakwaters, that 'the re-enforced concrete caisson furnishes perhaps the most satisfactory method of construction yet devised.'"

I have learned a great deal there and I hope to pick up some useful knowledge here and some dollars, not to take back to England but to spend in this glorious country.

"I have assisted in many theatrical productions there in England, and have also assisted to produce some good sound Anglo-American stock, — two sons and four daughters, — so that I don't think my sojourn in England has been devoid of adventure.

"I don't know if it would interest you to hear what I have done, but I have made a fair exchange of doing others and being done. There is a motto over there which reads, 'Do others or they will do you'; but honesty is always in the long run the best policy; on a sprint perhaps it would be impolitic to have too conscientious scruples.

"I have played 'Romeo' in London and they have let me come away or steal away, so I feel that my performance did not hurt their feelings, neither the censor or the police interfered, and one must be thankful for small mercies. Talking about police interference, they downed us in Manchester on Ibsen's 'Ghosts,' and for that I was also thankful.

"I can highly recommend England as an excellent training ground for actors, but they don't give you the plums; you must grab those where you see the opportunity and kick a goal as it were from the 45-yard mark. I kicked.

"If you should ask me how American acting compares with English, it would be a most difficult question to answer, but I am inclined to give the palm for character acting to America, and for romantic drama to England; for dash and go in musical comedy the American girl is hard to beat. We have plenty of excellent actors on this side of the water, especially character actors. America is the place for work, and in my estimation is good enough for any one to live in; at any rate I intend to make it my home, as I have always looked upon it as my home.

"I hope to take up my duties as an American citizen, and fulfil my obligations as a Harvard man and a member of the noted class of '86. A breakdown in health prevented my going through with my final examinations, which precluded me from placing B.A. after my name, which I hope will not stand in your estimation for bad actor; I am like the little boy with the curl in the middle of his forehead, 'when he was bad he was horrid,' and I hope when I am good — very very good."

'11, wrote: "The monotonous grind of existence, incidental to the perpetuation thereof, continues unabated. Yet I do look out of the windows occasionally. In November, 1906, I had the Boston Mailing Bureau send out, anonymously, a red-on-yellow card beginning 'For heaven's sake stop Shaw's inflating the currency on a rising price index.' Somebody did 'stop Shaw.' Just before the panic of 1907 I got out a pamphlet, 'Cash, Panics, and Industrial Depressions.' It can be read through now, in the light of the new developments, without finding occasion for amendment. Immediately after the panic I sent out another red-on-yellow card predicting the drop in interest rates and protesting against any contraction in the currency until commodity prices should stop falling. I have little fault to find with the conduct of the Treasury under either Cortelyou or MacVeagh. In February, 1909, I printed (and later sent out a card): 'Underlying conditions are now further advanced toward an orgy of bankers' inflation than in the same month of 1906'; pointing out that this was liable to develop before Congress should meet in December, and calling for an extra session of Congress to enact 'an immediate emergency measure against inflation before the integrity of the buying value of the dollar is lost.' Bradstreet's Index Number, which reached 9.1293 before the Wall Street collapse of March, 1907, reached 9.2310 January 1, 1910. If the people at Washington would have let me run the country, our 'high cost of living' experience, the speculative disorders leading up to it, and the depression while falling back again would all have been saved. In January, 1910, while my correspondents were predicting a still cheaper dollar, I wrote that it looked like the top of the wave and the beginning of a decline which must last until Europe's rising prices and our falling prices should restore our export level. I have now been quiet for about fourteen months, but will predict another spasm of inflation to start very soon unless our loose-shackled banking fraternity can be controlled by some power more intelligent or more public spirited than themselves. Our country is suffering from 'excess-banking.' In February, 1910, I framed up the 'Monetary paradox': 'Monetary equilibrium may be secured by curtailing loans when the demand for loans increases and inflating loans when the demand for loans decreases.'

"1909-10 I aided and assisted in a campaign, hopeless in the beginning, to defeat Hale, '96, in his congressional aspirations — this with no ill-will to our Alma Mater. Last year I got out a pamphlet in support of the ratification of the income tax amendment, which measure I now consider secure. As against Roosevelt's five reforms, although I am with him a 'very radical democrat,' I prefer President Taft's five measures — Sherman Act to stand, Income Tax Amendment to be ratified, Tariff Commission, Postal Savings banks, Reciprocity with Canada. Economically speaking, we are living in the world's greatest epoch."

After graduating began the study of medicine under the preceptorship of Dr. J. C. Dalton and subsequently matriculated in the College of Physicians and Surgeons from which he took his degree.

After a competitive examination he received the appointment of interne in the New York Hospital, where he served upon the house staff during the regulation period, after which he went to Roosevelt Hospital, New York City, where he was instrumental in organizing the gynecological service to which he devoted one year of his time. He was then appointed chief of clinic in the department of gynecology in the Vanderbilt Clinic, and he also acted as assistant gynecologist to the General Memorial Hospital. The practice of gynecology not being congenial to his taste, and having a preference for the science of neurology, he accepted a position at Glen Springs Sanitarium, Watkins, N. Y., in order to perfect himself in this particular branch of the science of medicine. He remained in this institution for two and one-half years and then engaged in private practice in Syracuse, where he has obtained a position of prominence. He is attending physician Syracuse Hospital for Women and Children; consulting neurologist Hospital of Good Shepherd, Syracuse, N. Y.; consulting physician St. Lawrence State Hospital for Insane, Ogdensburg, N. Y.; and neurologist to the Syracuse Free Dispensary.

JOHN WALLACE RIDDLE

Born July 12, 1864, at Philadelphia, Pa.

Father's Name: John Wallace Riddle

Mother's Maiden Name: Rebecca Blair McClure

Residence Address: 385 Pleasant Ave., St. Paul, Minn.

'88-'89, in the Columbia College Law School.

Since '93, has been in the diplomatic service.

The following is the record of his diplomatic appointments:

Alfred M. Potter

J. W. Riddle

WILLIAM NOBLE ROUNDY

Records of the Class

April 15, '93, Secretary of Legation, Constantinople.

November 4, '01, Secretary of Embassy, St. Petersburg.

September 8, '03, Agent and Consul General, Cairo.

March 8, '05, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Roumania and Servia.

December 19, '06, Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to Russia.

At the time of Riddle's appointment to Russia the following note appeared in the Boston Transcript:

Like the recent promotion of Henry White to be ambassador to France, Mr. Riddle's elevation from the joint mission to Roumania and Servia at a salary of $7500 to be ambassador to Russia at a salary of $17,500 comes as a reward for long service and conspicuous diplomatic ability. It was while chargé d'affaires of embassy at St. Petersburg during the Kishineff troubles several years ago, that Mr. Riddle achieved his most notable triumph. When the President telegraphed the famous Kishineff petition in the face of the Russian Government's announcement that its ambassador at Washington, Count Cassini, would not receive the petition, Mr. Riddle went to the Russian Foreign Office by appointment to deliver a "message from the President." He first read to Count Lamsdorff the telegram from the President including the petition and then asked when the Russian Government would be pleased to receive it. Of course Count Lamsdorff declined to receive it, but Mr. Riddle had accomplished the President's object of having the petition reach the ear of the Russian minister of foreign affairs. The moral effect was great. At this time Count Cassini confided to friends at Washington that had it not been for the great personal regard cherished throughout the Russian court for Mr. Riddle the relations between the two countries might have been more severely strained. Mr. Riddle at the time received the thanks and congratulations of the President for the consummate skill with which he handled the situation. Mr. Riddle not only speaks Russian fluently but possesses a remarkable knowledge of Russian literature. The late Secretary Hay was wont to refer to him as "our Russian authority."

Baron Rosen, the Russian ambassador here, said of Mr. Riddle's appointment: "It will cause more than satisfaction and it will cause general delight in my country. He is one of the most remarkable linguists I have ever known. He speaks five or six languages and his Russian is perfect."

'11, wrote: "After a little more than a year in Roumania I went, in the early part of 1907, to our Embassy in Russia, where I spent nearly three years — my longest residence at any one place in the last ten years. Coming just after the war and the internal agitation of 1905-06, these years were comparatively peaceful with little but routine work to occupy the Embassy.

"I left the diplomatic service and returned to the United States in November, 1909, and devoted the first half of 1910 to a trip to the eastern and southern parts of South America, an interesting and inaccessible region I had never before found time to visit."

WARD THORON

Records of the Class

JULIUS WARREN STRAUSS

Born June 17, 1864, at Boston, Mass.

Father's Name: Philip Strauss

Mother's Maiden Name: Amelia Goldenberg

Died May 9, 1885

Julius Warren Strauss, the second son of Philip and Amelia (Goldenberg) Strauss, was born in Boston, Mass., June 17, 1864, and died May 9, 1885, his sudden death being caused by kidney disease.

Strauss fitted for Harvard at the Boston Latin School, where he made an enviable record, not only in scholarship, but also in deportment. In 1879 he received a prize for exemplary conduct and punctuality, and at the annual exhibition of the school in 1882 he was awarded a third prize for declamation.

In 1882 he entered college, passing "with credit" the examinations in Prescribed Physics and French. His college course was marked by the same excellence in studies that he had shown in his school work, while he still found time to give some attention to athletics.

Strauss was of a genial nature, and was liked by everybody with whom he came in contact, while he made many firm friends among the men in his society, the Everett Athenæum.

'10, working for Work-Horse Parade Association, and writing music.

'11, wrote: "My work has been the same blending of music and horses, with a few added features. At the date of the letter for the 1906 report I was recuperating physically and otherwise on a New England stock farm, following the publishing of a musical comedy, 'Happy Medium.'

"This has since had several amateur productions, and a number of '86 men were brave enough to attend, and kind enough to see it through. We are now trying to secure professional productions of this and of a more ambitious opera written during the summer of 1910.

"In between times I have made several reports for the Boston Work-Horse Parade Association on subjects connected with the work for better conditions for horses. The report that seems to have made the most trouble is on the comparative use of motor wagons and horses in trucking and delivery work.

"It was a fairly natural transition from balancing the action of trotting colts to helping men get into condition; and I have traveled with and trained several who had lost health through overwork or other causes. At this writing — Christmas, 1910 — there is a lot of work ahead on these varied lines, with music first and horses a close second. 'The Horse at the Piano is far better company than the Wolf at the Door.' "

'11, wrote: "In my last report I stated that I had been appointed ad interim lecturer on Political Economy in the fall of 1906 at the University of Chicago. In June, 1907, I finished my work at this institution and returned to Cambridge, Mass. During the following seven or eight months I was engaged as secretary of the Massachusetts Commission on Commerce and Industry — a commission appointed by Governor Guild to investigate the transportation facilities of New England, and more especially the merger of the Boston and Maine with the New York, New Haven, and Hartford Railway. After the report was issued in February, 1908, I at once proceeded to Williams College, where I had received an appointment in the fall of 1907 in the Department of Economics. Ever since February, 1908, I have been living at Williamstown, busily engaged in the work of teaching this subject, incidentally enjoying the beautiful mountains in the midst of which the college is situated. I have done little else beyond the rather exacting work of my department except that I have occasionally spoken on economic questions to clubs and other organizations. In the last election I did my little best to further the election of a Democrat, Professor E. M. Lewis of Williams, for Congress as against the present Republican incumbent, Congressman George P. Lawrence. While Professor Lewis did not succeed, he cut down a normal majority of over 7000 to a figure under 800."

ROLAND HAYWARD

Born March 7, 1865, at Milton, Mass.

Father's Name: Isaac Davenport Hayward

Mother's Maiden Name: Mary Bartlett Vose

Died April 11, 1906

Roland Hayward, a temporary member, died at Milton, April 11, 1906. He was the son of Isaac Davenport and Mary Bartlett Vose Hayward, and was born March 7, 1865, at Milton. Ill health in his senior year prevented him from taking the examination for his degree. At the time of his death a movement was being made, though unknown to him, by the scientific men of Cambridge to have the degree of S.B. out of course given to him by the college. He was for fifteen years a member of the Boston Stock Exchange, and senior partner of the firm of Hayward & Townsend. July 1, 1902, he retired from active business and devoted himself to scientific pursuits. He was an ardent entomologist, and possessed a wonderful collection of beetles and an excellent scientific library. He was a member of the Boston Society of Natural History, which he joined when a boy, and was treasurer of the Cambridge Entomological Club. He had classified several families of beetles, and published many valuable papers upon these subjects, and had another paper almost completed at the time of his death. He has bequeathed his superb collection of beetles (Coleoptera) to the Museum of Comparative Zoölogy at Harvard, and his scientific library to the Boston Society of Natural History and the Milton Public Library. Hayward though reserved and not fond of "society," as it is popularly known, with his family and his intimates was most genial and was bound by the strongest ties. To those who came within the circle of his friends he was most devoted and ever ready to do a kind act. The last years of his life were spent in his old family home at the foot of Blue Hill in Milton, and here, with his love of nature and amid the scenes of his childhood, he was supremely happy. He never married, and at his death left one brother, Dr. George G. Hayward, '77, and one sister, the wife of Henry W. Cunningham, '82.

JAMES ELLIS HUMPHREY

Born August 5, 1862, at Weymouth, Mass.

Father's Name: James Humphrey

Mother's Maiden Name: Susan Cushing

Died August 17, 1897

James Ellis Humphrey, the only son of James and Susan (Cushing) Humphrey, was born in Weymouth, Mass., August 5, 1862, and died of malarial fever at Port Antonio, Jamaica, August 17, 1897.

At the age of sixteen he graduated from the Weymouth High School, and, notwithstanding his youth, he was immediately appointed master of the grammar school at North Weymouth, near his home.

Next followed a business experience in the employ of the Prang Educational Company, and here he was brought in contact with people who stimulated him to further study and to study in scientific lines. One of his vacations was spent in study at the Martha's Vineyard Summer Institute. On his return he fitted up a little laboratory at his home, and every spare moment was devoted to collecting the seaweeds in that most productive place, the Weymouth Fore River, which ran to the sea almost before his father's door.

In the autumn of 1883 he was enrolled as a special student in the Lawrence Scientific School and soon not only took the regular course, but also did the four years of required work in three, receiving at the Commencement in 1886 the degree of Bachelor of Science, summa cum laude.

Immediately after graduation he received an appointment as assistant in botany. When the college year began Professor Goodale was abroad, and so the whole work of organizing the courses and of giving the lectures, as well as conducting the laboratory work, not only in the college, but also in the "Annex," devolved entirely upon Humphrey.

In the summer of 1887 he was appointed instructor in botany, in the University of Indiana. Professor Farlow in his letter recommending him for the place said that in his lectures he would "talk botany and not about botany."

The next year he accepted an appointment in the State Experiment Station at Amherst, Mass., and continued his studies for the doctor's degree. He chose for the subject of his dissertation a group of obscure aquatic fungi known as the Saprolegniaceæ and his paper upon these forms published by the American Philosophical Society will long remain a classic. His work upon them is especially noticeable from the fact that in his studies he employed the recent cytological method which, up to that time, had been entirely ignored by American botanists. He received the degree of Doctor of Science from Harvard in 1892.

In January, 1893, Dr. Humphrey resigned his position at the Amherst Station, and later in the same year (1893) he sailed for Europe, and entered the laboratory of Professor Edward Strasburger, at Bonn.

As a mark of honor from the German botanists, he was made a member of the Deutsche Botanische Gesellschaft of Berlin, on the fifteenth of May, 1894.

In the fall of that year (1894), Dr. Humphrey was appointed fellow by courtesy in the Johns Hopkins University. The next year he was made lecturer in botany, and last spring, just before he sailed again to Jamaica, he was advanced to the position of associate professor of botany in this institution.

Besides the regular course of lectures at the University upon the Comparative Morphology of reproduction, he superintended daily laboratory work, and often took part in field excursions.

During the early part of last winter he gave a course of lectures upon the history of botany to a popular audience. The full attendance at these lectures to the very last, where without so much as a map or a diagram, he was able to hold hour after hour from week to week, the attentive interest of his hearers, must testify to his skill in selection and the aptness in mode of presentation of a subject generally considered a dry one among laymen.

In many ways Dr. Humphrey was an ideal man. He was the very soul of purity and honesty. He had high ideals, and was outspoken in his opinions of dishonesty in business or intellectual matters. A piece of slovenly work excited his disgust. He was strong in his friendships and faithful to his friends. He was strongly optimistic — no matter how dark the moment, he could always see blue sky ahead. He was an honest, careful worker, and he thought clearly upon the subject of his studies. He was social, and he enjoyed good society as much as any man could. He had a keen appreciation of humor, and the artistic side of his nature was highly developed.

FRANK BURSLEY TAYLOR

Born November 23, 1860, at Fort Wayne, Ind.

Father's Name: Robert Stewart Taylor

Mother's Maiden Name: Fanny Wright

Residence Address: 548 Home Ave., Fort Wayne, Ind.

Present Business: Geologist, chiefly Pleistocene subjects

Marriage: Date, April 24, 1899. Place, Mackinac Island, Mich.

Maiden Name of Wife: Minnetta Amelia Ketchum

After leaving college in '86, spent about six years traveling and at health resorts in search of health. About '90 began to spend part of each summer studying glacial and post-glacial geology in the Great Lakes region.

'90-1900, published about twenty papers on this subject.

'94, was abroad, March to November.

'07, took Clark's Mediterranean Cruise on Str. Arabic.

May, 1900, on the Michigan State Geological Survey.

1900-'06, special field assistant.

'06, field assistant United States Geological Survey. Part of summers of '08 and '09 on Canadian Geological Survey.

Clubs or Societies since graduation: A. A. A. S., Geological Society of America, Indiana Academy Science, Michigan Academy Science (vice-president), Association of American Geographers, American Geographical Soc., Ottawa Field Naturalists'

Club, Seismological Soc. of America, National Geographic Society, American Forestry Association.

'11, wrote: "It seems rather singular that the paths of my life since leaving college have brought me into contact with so few '86 men. Only eight or ten have I met more than once, and perhaps ten or fifteen others for one brief moment. Although my home is in an area of rather thin '86 population, I have traveled in this country and abroad enough, it seems to me, to justify the expectation of more frequent meetings, even not counting those that were prearranged.

"I have been spending most of my time in summer seasons doing geological field work. This has ranged from Minnesota to central New England, but has been chiefly in the southern peninsula of Michigan, in Ohio, New York, and western New England, with a considerable amount also in Ontario. The winters have been spent mainly in the preparation of reports, and in doing some other writing.

"The most delightful event of my experience since 1906 was a pleasure trip abroad with my wife and my parents. We joined the 1907 cruise of the Arabic to Mediterranean ports, leaving New York the 7th of February and returning the last of May. I think we enjoyed Egypt above all other countries. After leaving the regular party at Rome we sauntered leisurely northward across Europe, lingering some time in the cities of northern Italy and in England. Most of the ground from Naples northward was somewhat familiar to me from my trip in 1894.

"Three years ago I joined with some of my townsmen in pushing a project for a deep waterway to connect Lake Erie with the southern end of Lake Michigan. The route would be a very advantageous short cut for waterborne transportation, and is generally known as the Toledo, Fort Wayne, and Chicago canal. I have been sent twice to Washington to participate in hearings before committees of the House on this matter, and I have visited Toledo and other places in the same cause. I also prepared a pamphlet discussing the feasibility of this project.

Records of the Class

“Without going through the class report exhaustively, I have noted with some surprise that I seem to be the only man associated with the class who has pursued science—I mean pure science or investigation—as practically the only occupation of his life; if there are any I have overlooked them. Some of the physicians of the class, however, have become eminent as original investigators and are doing much more than your humble servant to make the name of '86 shine in the annals of science.”

'11, wrote: "I appreciate more than I can express by letter the action of the class of '86 in making me an honorary member. It was the ambition of my early life that I should be a graduate of Harvard College. It has been the regret of my later life that circumstances were such that I could not come to Harvard for my undergraduate study. No other degree that the University can grant is the equivalent of the Bachelor's degree. No other association with the University can take the place of class association. Even being one of the directors of the Alumni Association has not given me the sense of 'belonging' which is given me by this action of your class.

"Please transmit to the Class Committee and to the Class my deep appreciation of their kindness and of the honor which they have conferred upon me."

TAYLOR, FRANK BURSLEY

About thirty papers, nearly all relating to the Pleistocene (glacial and postglacial) geology of the Great Lakes region, with a few relating to Ontario and western New England. One, entitled A Short History of the Great Lakes, has been used as a reading lesson in Normal Schools and Colleges. The first paper was read before the Indiana Academy of Science in December, 1888; the first published was in the American Journal of Science for March, 1892. The rest were published mainly in that journal, in the American Geologist, the Journal of Geology, and the Bulletin of the Geological Society of America.

1. Joint author with Mr. Frank Leverett, geologist in the United States Geological Survey, of a monograph entitled Pleistocene Geology of Indiana and the Southern

BACCALAUREATE HYMN

BY ALFRED HENRY LLOYD

./ TUNE, Trust

I

Unto Him, the ever living,
Whose are we, and all we own,
Praises we are ever giving
For the goodness He has shown.

Undergraduate Record

II

Let these words be ever ringing
In our ears, where'er we be,
Which at parting we are singing, —
“Christo et Ecclesiae.”

III

Much we leave; but more is taken,
Love and hope and motives high, —
May they never be forsaken,
May they live until we die.

IV

Thou, O God, our Friend, Creator,
In our hearts put truth and love,
Make our longings higher, greater,
Give us faith in heaven above.

CLASS ODE

BY THOMAS PARKER SANBORN

I.

Dear Mother, we leave thee to join in the race
Where no man may weaken or yield,
And we look once again at thy beautiful face
And the word that is wrought on thy shield.
Thou has taught us to strive, thou has taught us to dare
In the years that forever have flown!
Farewell to thee, Mother, whose bountiful care
In the fulness of youth we have known.

II.

There is hope in our hearts, there is light in our eyes,
As we dream of the goal set before;
Though we linger, unwilling to break the old ties,
That shall bind us, alas, nevermore.
The ties may be severed, they'll ne'er be forgot,
Our hearts are forever the same,
From our thought, from our love, we will banish thee not:
Dear Mother, we'll win in thy name.

CLASS DAY ORATION

BY JOHN MCKINSTRY MERRIAM

THE fountain of youth has become a myth. In the present century reason has succeeded credulity, and fancy has given way to facts and logic. Yet even in this age of realism, evidences of a youth-giving fountain are apparent in our very midst. Contrasted with the life of man, which at best is but an unsuccessful struggle against age and weakness, there is a realm of life in which youth and vigor are eternal. It is in this latter realm — the life of institutions — that Harvard lives. The present year is a festival year, not only to members of 'Eighty-six, but to every alumnus and friend of our alma mater. It closes a quarter millenium of Harvard's life and growth. During those years generations of men have risen and fallen, but Harvard remains unshaken. Her strength changes only for greater strength; her fairness becomes still more fair; her success seems each moment at its acme, yet, as time passes on, there is no decline. In wonder we seek the source of her power. What is this fountain of youth that has robbed age of its weakness, and has given to increasing years ever increasing strength? This fountain of youth is in the character of the cause for which Harvard stands, — the cause of education. Education is living and is life-giving. It is ever needed and it is immortal. The past is indebted to it for progress toward civilization; it will give to the future a progress yet more marked.

The real meaning of the word education is not generally appreciated. Education is not mere cultivation of the intellect. Mental culture is a comparatively unimportant feature. Complete education ennobles the intellect, it is true, but it also guides the conscience and stimulates the will. It thus comprehends the development of the entire man; it has to do with the creation of tastes that will incite one to a life of earnest devotion to learning, to uprightness, and to action. By the influence of education, private life is elevated, society is founded on a broader basis, and the power of man is directed to social and political duties.

Education acts most directly upon the individual. It quickens his power of appreciation; it enables him to comprehend hidden facts; to gain inspiration from hitherto unperceived forms of beauty, to feel the sublimity of the thought that has seemed to him but folly. Accompanying this passive absorption, there is also, through the education of the will, a growth of active power. The energy of the unconscious world therefore is not lost, it becomes the impetus of human action; the latent power of the thought of centuries lives again in new ambitions and in continued achievements. Thus, under the influence of education, nature becomes an ever active incentive, and the souls of the good and great transmigrate from age to age.

Education serves even a grander purpose. Of far greater importance than the study of nature, of literature, or of the theories of the wise, is the study of each man by himself. By what means can the individual acquire a sense of the dignity of his being? How can that conscience within him become an unerring guide? How can his character gain in scope and in power? It is the highest function of education to furnish this dignity inherent in individual worth, to give to man trustworthy counsel, to struggle in alliance with native goodness for the supremacy, in private character, of reason and of honor.

The value of education to man as an individual, therefore, cannot be reckoned. It is the one force that gives him dominion over nature; appreciation of thought and fellowship with thinkers; and, above all else, high ideals of living.

Education, though dealing primarily with the individual, is also a power for the improvement of society. Social relations are at best complex. The interest of one class conflicts with that of another; the social harmony is disturbed, since prejudice makes discord of mere diversity of taste. Intellectual education is scoffed at by the man of business. Commercial energy and business enterprise are of secondary importance to the scholar. Capital oppresses labor, and the demands of labor are often unreasonable. There are thus so many distinct elements of society that to describe them by one word seems almost a misuse of language. These conflicts, however, can be traced to one cause. In every case only a partial education is present. The merely intellectual scholar has become so wrapt in his favorite theory that oftentimes he merely exists with the men of his age, while he lives with those of another. Though he made pride himself upon a learning as profound as that of Bacon, if nevertheless he is so absorbed in the past, or in remote theories that he forgets the simplest duties of the present, his education is a misnomer. His knowledge is almost valueless to society, for there is wanting that sympathy for humanity which is needed to make learning a blessing and render it worthy of praise. On the other hand, the man who lives only to obtain money deserves still harsher criticism. His thrift is of slight merit. He may amass a fortune, but the higher interests of society call for something beside wealth.

The education which serves to bring the elements of society together, to create society, is that which is capable of developing more than the business enthusiast, more even than the polished scholar. It is the education which produces the man, — the whole man, who with quickened intellect combines keen sympathies and a sturdy will, who respects and aids the good wherever present. If his special occupation is mercantile, he yet has an interest in learning. He is ready to join forces with the scholar and feels that he is thereby giving larger play to his own undeveloped faculties. If he is devoted to learning, he still identifies himself with efforts to carry forward the business prosperity of his community. As a capitalist he regards the interest of the laborer as inseparable from his own, and as a laborer he sees in the free use of capital his surest support and source of profit.

With this spirit of manhood, the student is on the path to social usefulness. His knowledge gains new meaning and greater strength, for above it is a superior knowledge, a recognition of social relations. He is no longer a mere ornament of society, he is an indispensable element. His influence is far-reaching. He stimulates private benevolence; he forwards public movements for good. In the midst of human depravity he is not dismayed. Education has displayed to him the beauty of a world that seemed at first without design and without meaning. He has learned that even degraded man is not wholly bad, that there is a possible glory even in him. Though he may clearly see the evil in all its forms in society, and doubt present ability successfully to oppose it, yet he cannot doubt the effect of the good in man, the development and final victory of which are the only ends that justify the immortality of such forces as education. His optimism, therefore, is not shallow. He does not foolishly deny present misery, nor does he merely trust the intervention of an unaided divine force. Relying upon higher help, perhaps, he nevertheless uses forces at hand and his own human faculties.

Education thus realized, becomes of unconquerable strength. It gives to man the sum of past experience and wisdom, united with the inspiring consciousness of present need, and faith in future success. To doubt the potency of such a force is to doubt the superiority of strength over weakness, of a noble manhood developed more and more fully by complete education, over a bestiality which is due to weakness and to ignorance.

The influence of education on society is, therefore, fundamental. It binds men together by identifying each one with interests beyond himself. It incorporates the power and nobility of the individual into the strength and grandeur of that larger individual, — society.

Combined with the social organism is the State. The profession of politics is one of peculiar temptations, one in which corruption and intrigue are in such daily use that they are deemed even justifiable and necessary. There is an urgent call for a force that can meet and overcome these destructive ideas. Education is the only source of the needed power. There are two offices for it to fill. It is needed to give life to the common citizen, to force home upon him the importance of simple civic duties, to emphasize his demand for honest officials, and to discountenance political trickery of all kinds. It is needed to hold public men to a sense of what they owe their positions and themselves, to establish higher ideals of public office and to call for a more conscientious use of public trusts. Education, therefore, is concerned with the recognition of a political conscience, — a conscience, personal to each man, and, moreover, the very genius of the profession.

Thus far we have traced the influences of complete education. We may now ask, in what degree has such an education a foothold at Harvard. Is the tendency here to lead one to educate himself as a man, or, after all, to develop only certain superficial qualities of manhood and to ignore the man himself; to send out workers into society, citizens into the State, or to contribute a yearly quota to a mock and burdensome aristocracy?

I am aware that there are some who will insist on the latter view and who will cite as examples of Harvard training, men who came, or rather were sent to college, from a mistaken idea of propriety, who acquired nothing from their college course save a distaste for work, and a fondness for light literature and the more frivolous of social pleasures, and who have merely posed in the circles to which their birth and wealth admitted them as clever sons of Harvard culture. Such culture, in the first place, is not culture; and, in the second, is not characteristic of Harvard. There is another class of graduates who call harsh criticism from the public upon college students in general. They are the careless, jovial, good fellows, whose habits formed at college, it is said, have supplanted that steadiness and diligence necessary for success. These men again are not a fair type of Harvard influences. The temptations to which they may have yielded are present in Harvard life, but they are also inseparable from any great centre of human activity. They are temptations which every young man meets, no matter where he is, and Harvard, so far from fostering them, presents more counteracting influences than the world in general places to her credit. These latter positive influences deserve more truly the distinctive title of Harvard, than the accidental temptations common to humanity everywhere. First among these influences is that sentiment which strives to assert itself throughout the length and breadth of our University, and is gaining ground year by year against the thoughtlessness, puerility, and imported viciousness which are apparent at times in our midst,—the sentiment that plain, straightforward manliness is the strongest attribute of the character of the man, and the most cultured grace of the excellence of the gentleman. This sentiment is not a weak, idle fancy. It is crude, perhaps, but it is real and it is active. It calls for fairness in college athletics, it frowns upon underhanded methods in college work, it demands a consideration of honor in every-day associations. A student may deserve credit for his scholarly ability, he may deserve thanks for his lavish generosity, or admiration for his athletic prowess, but whether or not he is a scholar, an heir of wealth and aristocracy, or a perfect athlete, his truest reputation in our college world depends upon his bearing as a man.

There are many subordinate forces that tend to strengthen this sentiment. The elective system calls for serious thought and definite purposes. The best college associations demand more than boyish thoughtlessness or cultured effeminacy. The influence of the men whose names are identified with Harvard, men who have given the college a character almost personal, is penetrating and lasting.

These various influences are the most representative features of a true Harvard education. They are the prescribed courses for one who would deserve to become an alumnus of Harvard, who would gain the real Harvard culture, — a culture which is not a synonym of idleness and dilettanteism, but which is the truest qualification for a position among men, — a position of work, of power, and of honor.

The fountain of Harvard's youth, therefore, is not a myth. Credulity may be necessary for belief in that fountain of youth of the Middle Ages, but even the reason of the Nineteenth Century can point with pride to a real fountain of youth, — education. So long as Harvard draws her strength from this fountain, though millennium succeed millennium, she will still live on, proving her right to live by her stand for the truth, by her ability to extend learning, to strengthen character, and to make men more genuine, more willing and able to work for the union of society and the purity of the State.

CLASS POEM

BY ALANSON BIGELOW HOUGHTON

"Let no flower of the spring pass by us: let us crown ourselves with rosebuds before they be withered." — BOOK OF WISDOM.

IN changeless change they go, the singing days;
The caravan of whispering phantom years
Moves on till lost amid the falling haze, —
Tears laugh to smiles, and smiles break into tears!
Like shadow-shapes that flit across a glass,
And come and go and into nothing pass,
The changing vision darkens while we gaze.
The glass is gone, the shadow disappears.

More fleet than love light-living for a day,
More vain than barren husks or ruined corn,
The years with weary eyes have fled away

Undergraduate Record

Through hidden ways and paths no feet have worn.
And gone are those who sought for higher things,
And those who heard the singing echoing strings
Of some diviner song that would not stay!
The age is feeble as a Samson shorn.

The days of youth and hope are flying fast;
The race is old; and age is worn and weak;
The vanish'd gods sleep in the buried past;
Pan's merry crowd no more the woodlands seek;
And Orpheus bringing song with golden lute,
And sirens singing by the rivers mute
Are hushed and still, — the first and so the last!
The waking came, and shadows do not speak.

What time is this to play with things that seem
When thought is sick and hope is wan and spent!
When faith is dying in a troubled dream
Of gods forgotten and of creeds unmeant!
What time is this to rest in wanton ease
When Wrong is great and Right forever flees, —
While yet the fagots in the ashes gleam
Of smouldering fires of hate and discontent!

So men have dreamed, and waked, in other time.
The poppied gardens, and the whispering trees,
The sobbing waters, and the wind's soft rhyme
Have been forgot, and shunned the golden ease.
With weary feet they wandered, though the ways
Were rough, and dreary grew the empty days,
And stony seemed the mountain-paths to climb, —
They faltered not, and caught the upland breeze.

These very walls the coming years will teach
While youthful hearts recall what Youth has said,
For Love with tender touch has healed the breach
That death in sorrow left between the dead.

It was not only those who won who wore
The laurel leaves, nor those who failed who bore
The weight of tears. Fame came and grief to each.
The laurel leaves are wet with tears once shed.

Love lives in youth! And we may wipe the tears
That linger yet where memory will not die,
And speed the coming of the better years,
And pray these shadows of the past to fly.
The past is dead. And in the coming time
There ever dawns a vision more sublime
Of golden promise through a cloud of fears.
The night is gone, and morn fills all the sky.

With hopes that echo like a sweet faint rhyme,
Or waver like a wan wave on the sea,
We stand, the last fruits of a passing time,
The first fruits of a time that is to be.
For us the future opens wide her ways
Of endless glory: through the coming days
That sing and echo like a distant chime,
We face the presence of eternity.

The ages gone are as a dream forgot;
The future beckons, and our hearts are fain;
There is no past whose dreary dreams distraught
Seem haggard mockers of our empty gain.
And Death and Life, the lords of earth and men,
Seem foolish phantoms. For, with prophet-ken,
Each knows, though vaguely, that his soul has caught
A glimpse of all that Infinites contain.

But hope flies ever on Icarian wing;
One glimpse, — the vision fades to empty air.
Where once the leaf-crowned hours in merry ring
Danced madly on, the dance is done for e'er.
In subtle change May passes into June,

Undergraduate Record

And discord jangles rough in life's sweet tune, —
From May to June, and still the flowers spring!
But pleasure falters; joy turns into care.

The rhythmic ebb and flow of Time's dark stream
Sweeps ever onward toward an unknown sea;
The rhythmic ages, rising, falling, seem
To beat great strophes of eternity;
The far off golden stars grow bright, and die;
The very gods that lived, in silence lie;
Like torches in a wind that, flickering, gleam,
A little while men are, then cease to be.

A barren harvest, and a sterile yield!
A foolish struggle, and a senseless strife!
Men sow forever in a stony field,
And reap the ruined harvest-fruit of life;
The end seems nothing when the task is done.
And when the foolish years their race have run,
Men pass we know not where, for shut and sealed
Are birth and death, the doors that lead to life.

Unknown, unheard, the silent future waits,
Enfolding all things in the coil of Time;
The golden promise lingers in her gates,
And lights the lonely ways where few may climb.
Our lives are shadows, but with meaning fraught,
The shadows of eternal things, and wrought
From tears and laughter by the whispering Fates.
Our songs are echoes of the song sublime.

Once Youssuf rode ('t is told in Arab lore!)
As goes the swift wind, on a wild foray;
And, riding, came on one who knelt to pore
With straining eyes there in the desert way
For something lost. "Friend, seek you here the truth?"
To whom that other — "Nay, I seek but youth,

But youth, but youth, nor find it any more!"
And Youssuf silent turned, and rode away.

O foolish dreamer and more foolish dream!
O senseless seeker for the never-found!
As well to look for truth in things that seem
As search for Youth where Youth lived flower-crowned.
Is Youth not going with the days that flee? —
O foolish dreamer, let the dead past be!
Were it not better far in this mad scheme
To snatch the present from the loss around?

Were it not better to forget the truth —
To dream in folly than to wake in pain?
To crown the brows with rose or bay, forsooth,
Than chase for shadows coming not again?
As lilies lazy floating on a stream
To let the days flow restless on, and dream?
And when they vanished once, these days of youth,
Night would be welcome; loss would be a gain.

Ah, foolish Youth that loves and longs and sighs,
More fickle than the singing summer wind,
Forever seeking for the truth that flies,
Forever wrestling with the years that bind —
O Youth, be glad, and let the doubtings die!
The seeds of promise in the present lie,
And all the future smiles through Youth's sweet eyes!
Be glad; be glad; the way lies not behind.

We have but faith; we trust, but cannot know;
We search for truth as men in darkness grope,
While through the dusty ways Death wanders slow,
And spares not one in all life's little scope.
Amid the seas and sounds and flowers and men,
Each stands alone, nor knows if aught has been.
And still the sorry phantoms come and go!
The sum of earth's sad lore is this, — we hope!

Undergraduate Record

The sobbing lips that sung in other days
Ere Youth was weary, and when Time was young Sang ever of a truth that through the haze
Of tears and years from age to age has rung.
Let love be swift and hope to fade away,
And death the end of life's fantastic play, —
That what is writ is writ, the word and phrase:
And sung, the song may never be unsung.

Men are not bubbles on Time's sluggish stream
To aimless drift, or break in empty air;
There is a real, for life is not a dream;
There is a truth, for truth is everywhere.
And out of darkness faith breaks on the eyes, —
Faith, born in sorrow by the doubt that dies!
Yet, seaward, through the mists, the shadows teem
Where Night waits silent, while the Fates forbear.

A crown of sterile laurel when we fall,
Or withered leaves, or yet a scentless rose!
What bitter jest is this, if this be all?
What gifts are these the barren present shows?
Are men to vanish as the shadows go?
The very lips of silence whisper No!
Change comes, and swiftly sweeps the great and small;
The waves are spent, but still the river flows.

Love will not know, nor lips that love recount,
Who with us stand and fight and will not fly,
For haggard Death will close the sad account,
And spent the struggle seems, and lost for aye.
Be brave! for hope is ever swift to flee;
Be brave! for surely some may only see
As Moses from the top of Pisgah's mount
Saw all he longed for, and lay down to die.

So let the weary ages fade away,
The weary years, the weary, weary days!
Be brave! forget not! This is all they say,
But follow on while yet the present stays!
The doubts and dreamings pass and fade and die,
The sorry laughter, and the smiles that sigh, —
The cross may come, and none to bid it nay.
Be brave! forget not! What are scorn or praise!

Here is the end, and here the new begins;
Fair life and death locked fast in fierce embrace;
The end of careless hours and pleasant sins,
The birth of manhood, and a sterner grace.
The morning leaves the purple mists that veil
Her sweet shy eyes, and, while the soft clouds pale,
She falls asleep, and weaves her dreams and spins.
Awake! For o'er the hills comes Night apace.

IVY ORATION

BY HAMMOND LAMONT

THE poor old world has wearily stumbled on for a considerable number of years. It will probably stumble on somehow for a few years more. We, as those before us, can but add our little mite of incompleteness. So, in view of these solemn facts, I feel constrained to rebuke the ill-timed levity of our Orator and our Poet, and to denounce in fearless terms the awful frivolity that I see on every side. Probably no faculty is so supremely developed in these bits of humanity called men, as the faculty of minding other people's business. Yet believe me, though I condemn your wicked folly, I am moved by no spirit of meddling, but by a deep interest in your welfare.

The universe is my subject. It is divided into two parts, the chief of which is the Class of 'Eighty-six. Throwing aside the insignificant portion, we will proceed at once to the discussion of the remainder, using the historical method. My researches cover the period from September, 1882, to the present moment. It is evident that for exhaustive treatment I should have begun with the primordial protoplasm, and ended in the remotest future; but I did n't.

In looking over the year of 1882 and 1883, the most striking thing is that our strenuous efforts to seem at home were unsuccessful. In vain we tried to live up to those models of scholarly deportment, Student Life at Harvard, Hammersmith, and Guernedale. The truth is that when we came here, we were, like other freshmen, blissfully ignorant of our callowness; to be sure, we saw something the least bit unsophisticated in the man who wished the Faculty to let him become engaged — urging that both his parents and hers were willing. But, in contemplating the extreme folly of that man, each of us felt that he at least knew what was what, and what was n't. I remember that I existed in a particularly self-satisfied frame of mind, until I met a classmate from a country town. As his native place boasted of a mayor, a fire-engine, and a girls' college, he naturally thought that he had seen a great deal of the world. Eying me with the air of a connoisseur, he said, superciliously, "Are you from Amherst?"

I was not.

"Well, you look exactly like a fellow I have seen there." Then, feeling some apology due, he added graciously, "I hardly liked to call you by the name of that Amherst fellow, for he was the darndest, greenest looking thing I ever saw."

Though we, as freshmen, were simply overwhelmed with our own importance, yet, curiously enough, we did not for a moment hesitate to pronounce 'Eighty-seven the freshest class which we could remember. Now, when we can look at the matter in an unprejudiced way, we confess that we have less muscle than 'Eighty-seven, but — thank Heaven! — more brains. For was it not an 'Eighty-seven man who opened a theme on divorce with the words, "Our Lord in the Bible says so and so, but I think the opposite"?

To-day, however, we are no longer seniors. Though we are modest, the truth will out; no bushel is large enough to hide our shining virtues. So we may as well acknowledge that we are universally beloved and respected. Indeed, the emotions which the beauty of our characters awakens in others, is shown by the Dean's tender notes to us, and the beautiful letters which he has written to our parents, setting forth our manifold excellencies. Have we not sucked all the oranges that grow on the Tree of Knowledge? Are not our achievements already famous? Yes, we have benefited science by finding that missing link between man and brute, — the Conference Committee. It is composed of those members of the Faculty who have begun to show signs of intelligence, and of those students who have not. We have proved that educated men can take an interest in politics; inspired by the purest patriotism, we displayed high-minded impartiality by booming both Blaine and Cleveland. Upon those occasions, when we were armed, not with guns nor swords, but simply with pocket-pistols, we gave an exhibition of military tactics, such as the generals of the effete monarchies of the old world have never witnessed. We made a new departure in athletics by breaking all previous records in rowing eight-oared shells with six men. Furthermore, 'Eighty-six has started the Harvard Monthly, a periodical which perhaps no single word, sanctioned by polite usage, can fully and adequately describe.

Though we have gone through all our harrowing experiences together, yet we have been harrowed differently, — not in one way, nor in two ways, but in many ways. So, in spite of the statements of Western journals, Harvard men are not as like as two peas. One has come out a student of the classics; he enjoys the Greek tragedians, because they so beautifully illustrate that fascinating work, Goodwin's Greek Moods and Tenses. His spirit finds refreshment in the erratic forms of the verb, which, we have been taught to believe, constitute perhaps the principal of the many supreme merits of Homer; and his soul rises in indignation at the shameless violation of the inspiring rules of Allen and Greenough, revealed in the unseemly subjunctive of Horace.

Still another takes philosophy, art, and literature. This apostle of sweetness and light reads nothing later than Jane Austen: and he deems any one shockingly illiterate who has not studied the works of every blockhead who spun nonsense before the year 1800. With supreme contempt, he dubs all who differ with him "Philistines"; yet, with all his talk about Harvard culture, the majority of us do not object a bit to Philistinism. On the contrary, we boast of it, for the more we have the more popular the University is.

And to crown all, stands the scientist, who justly claims to be the most American of us all. He believes in sending to the benighted heathen those civilizers which painting and poetry could never have given, namely, the ennobling steam engine; the telephone, with its refining influence; and elevated railways, which do so much to make men live a higher life.

For a number of years it has been the custom of the Ivy Orator to present an able and interesting discussion of various athletic questions. But I wish to treat of another matter; I should like for a few moments to call your attention to some of our literary celebrities. This is not because they have been bashful about calling attention to themselves — far from it; — for one of the people most prominent — in his own mind — is the college editor. His genius it is which shines forth so dazzlingly in the papers; he really believes that he is talented, that he alone knows how to write. He is mistaken. From a somewhat extended acquaintance with the subject, I wish to state definitely that it takes no brains to edit a college publication. Both the editors and the papers show this. And perhaps I cannot better prove this proposition, — as we have been taught dogmatically that all propositions must be proved, — than by laying before you brief specimens of the manner in which our journals deal with that subject of vital and ever fresh importance, the Class Day of 'Eighty-six.

The Advocate should, of course, claim to be the most representative Harvard paper; and it should not fail to mention the fact that it is the oldest. No damage is done if it is a trifle non-committal.

It will say:

"It is with no small degree of pride that we call attention to the fact that to-day witnesses a remarkable fulfilment of the prophecies of the Advocate, which has been established longer than any other paper at Harvard, and has been enlarged from twenty-two to thirty columns. As long ago as last November we predicted that the 'Eighty-six Class Day would come on Friday; not only this, but that Friday would be on the twenty-fifth of June. Curious as it may seem, this prediction of the Advocate — which has recently celebrated its twentieth birthday, and has been enlarged from twenty-two to thirty columns — has been carried out to the very letter.

"And now it is necessary to say a word of farewell. 'Eighty-six has reflected credit, not only upon Harvard College, but upon that oldest and most representative of her papers, the Advocate, which has recently added eight columns of reading matter. And though 'Eighty-six has left us, we shall try to improve, so far as may be, and to hand down to others, our University, and that most venerable student publication, which has recently been enlarged from twenty-two to thirty columns, without increase of price, — the Advocate.

As our daily paper, the Crimson is also our most representative journal. Since it has more space than news, its editorials need not be very compact; indeed, rather a loose style covers the most space; and if you are always non-committal, you can take up yards of paper by debating both sides of the question. Above all, the Crimson should exhort us to do things, making free use of the words, "Let us then."

Its editorial reads thus:

"The present issue of the CRIMSON is the last one for the year, a year which we are not only pleased but proud to say has been successful alike in scholarship, which is our vocation, and in athletics, which is our avocation. Let us then for this success return our thanks to the present graduating class of 'Eighty-six. Let us, in bidding her farewell, for these are our last words to her, give her praise for the high standard of excellence which she has set before us; and let us wish the heartiest success in whatever he may undertake, be it the profession of law, medicine, preaching, or teaching, all of them professions of which no Harvard man need be ashamed, to each of her members. Let us not be accused of elaborate eulogy, when we say that 'Eighty-six has set before us a high standard of excellence; we do not mean to say by this that 'Eighty-six has been a perfect class. Far from it. But we do say that she has set an example which no class should be ashamed to follow. Let us then see to it, that the year to come shall be in no wise inferior to that which has passed. Let us have every man do his best, and the year will be successful."

The Lampoon is supposed to be light and witty. Thus expressing the feelings generally uppermost among us, it is, of course, the most representative of Harvard journals. Let me say here that this paper alone is ideally conducted: its editors have succeeded admirably in their duty of being slangy; of making numerous references to U. 5, the Dean, and the Bursar, topics as old, and, we may add, as entertaining as a circus joke itself. Since its editorials are written about nothing, it cannot be non-committal nor otherwise.

Its words run thus:

"Ah there, 'Eighty-six! Lampy will miss you, 'Eighty-six. The places, — like U. 5, — which knew you once shall know you no more. You are going where the wicked cease from troubling: for the Dean has summoned you for the last time; the Bursar will never throw fond and coy glances at you again.

"This is your field-day; do you feel dazed to see all the pretty girls? The Ibis could not offer Miss Roseleaf his heart and hand, but he did the next best thing, he tendered her his crop and claw.

"You have been a credit to yourself, 'Eighty-six. Your aquatic record is unparalleled. By hard work in your Freshman year, you won fourth place in the class races; and in spite of the frantic and desperate efforts of the other classes, you have kept this position ever since.

"But we cannot be with you always; we must go to bill and coo with the Bursar. So, as the Dean remarked when he suspended Hollis Holworthy, Ta! ta! And, by the way, don't forget to invite us to your punch next year, when you are a gray-haired graduate."

Since the Monthly gives our soberest thought, it gives our truest thought, and therefore, like the other three, it is most truly representative of the University. As its writers are wiser than all the rest of the world put together, they can follow their own judgment about being non-committal — and they do. This magazine should look with haughty scorn upon all mundane trivialities; and it should not fail to give abroad the impression that in the midst of life we are in death — sweet death.

It begins in this way:

"With this number the Monthly ends its first year. Although we have tried to set forth the best and most steadfast undergraduate thought, we know that we have not in every way achieved our aim. Yet we hope we have not wholly fallen short of our purpose; for in this world of bitterness, nothing is bitterer than the feeling that our struggles have come to naught. Still, if when we have done what we can, we miss the mark, our failure is but one more in a world which is a failure. And in sooth, we can scarcely hope that our work shall stand in this age, when the worst is deemed the best.

"To-day, moreover, the Monthly must say good-bye to the class which started it. To-day 'Eighty-six goes out, as many another class has gone; its members will work, follow love, life's great illusion, and then die; and having wrought, loved, and died, they will sink into the dust and be forgotten. Of all who long for renown or wealth, a few only will be rich or remembered; and the others will pass into the darkness, saddened by the consciousness that their toils and their troubles, their strivings and their hopes have been unavailing. In a few short years we shall be wiser than we are now; but the fruit of the Tree of Knowledge is Dead Sea apples."

And now, classmates, for a word of advice. To those who have not yet chosen their life-work, even at this late moment when standing on the threshold, we are to give into other hands the task of running the University, and take up instead the job of running the universe, — to any such I would say, get glory and money by starting a dime museum. Why, there are plenty of relics and curiosities right here in Cambridge. All it needs is enterprise. In the first place there is our Orator, who should be exhibited while delivering one of his intensely amusing speeches at the Harvard Union. The Faculty might form a handsome group, representing "The Happy Family Drinking Tea," — a foretaste of peace on earth. Space should also be reserved for that highly successful institution, the Harvard Annex. Its members are so strong minded that they will not marry, — any one short of an assistant professor, — still, few remain unmarried. Our Chief Marshal would be a valuable rarity; he increased a pound in weight during the freshmen race at New London, and he has been gaining flesh at the same rate ever since. A literary curiosity would be a ballad by our Poet on a cheerful subject. A striking scenic effect would be produced by a tableau — "The Yard Committee Resigning." And even though an extra charge of ten cents should be made, every one would wish to see, done in wax, "An Eminent Physician, in the Act of discovering Heart Disease, One Hour before a Race."

But if I wished to talk of what might be, there would be no end to my discourse. And precious things should not be too lavishly cast abroad. So I shall close with a few brief words, which I hope will never be obliterated from your memory. Remember that you are going forth into the best possible of worlds, where, as all agree, virtue is invariably rewarded. And let none who enter the professions forget that, though there may be room at the top of the ladder, there is a great deal more on the ground at the bottom. Above all, bear in mind that the saying, "Be good and you will be happy," is as true as ever — for never was it true.
